

PARIS.

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY,

FRIDAY, MARCH 23.

THE Minister for Foreign Affairs communicated the following Letter from the Canton of Bern to the King:

"SIRE,

"The oldest Swiss regiment in France which has remained invariably faithful to its duty for more than a century, and whose conduct has been always irreproachable—the Regiment of Ernest—has just experienced at Aix the most cruel of misfortunes. Affailed by numbers greatly superior, retrained in its means of defence by the new law which it had sworn to observe, and betrayed, perhaps, by him whose duty it was to protect it, the regiment was compelled to lay down its arms in an open war against your Majesty's declared enemies, it would not have quitted them but with life. We will not distress you, Sire, by detailing the particulars of the perfidy and atrocity which marked this disastrous event, and we will not attempt to describe to you the deep impression of grief which it has made on us and all our people.

"Under these circumstances we have but one course to take—that of recalling our regiment, whose services can be no longer useful to your Majesty.

"The honour of the regiment, and the protection which we owe to it, oblige us to withdraw it from a country where the treaties on the faith of which it came there, are violated with impunity. We therefore expect of your justice, Sire, that you will be pleased to give orders, that, after restoring to the regiment of Ernest the arms and the property of which it was despoiled by an unjust and illegal act of violence, a route may be marked out for it, by which to withdraw into its own country.

"Deign, Sire, to call to mind that our troops have often merited the favours with which the Kings your predecessors, as well as your Majesty, have honoured the Swiss nation in general, and our Republic in particular.

"We will add no other motive for obtaining that this regiment may cross the kingdom by the shortest, the most commodious, and the safest road, and be allowed to leave it with honour.

"Constantly animated with the same attachment, Sire, to your person, we shall not cease to put up prayers for your happiness, and that of your kingdom."

The Assembly referred it to the Executive Power to negotiate for the continuance of the regiment in the French service.

In consequence of new disorders at Brie-Comte-Robert, which threatened to cut off the regular supplies of provisions from Paris, the Assembly authorized the Executive Power to station two battalions of troops of the line within the distance of their place of sitting prescribed by the Constitution.

The remaining articles on the sequestration of the property of the emigrants were decreed.

The Minister for the Home Department stated, that by accurate accounts transmitted to his office, there was a sufficient quantity of grain in the kingdom, or bargained for, to be delivered at the several ports, to supply the consumption till after harvest, and that the only things that could occasion local scarcity were forestalling in order to export, and preventing the free circulation.

Evening Sitting.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs laid before the Assembly a copy of a Treaty concluded by Monsieur and M. D'Artois with the Prince of Hohenloe, and the Prince of Battenstein, for a regiment of infantry, and another of cavalry, to be employed by subsidy in the service of France; and a copy of a letter to these Princes from the Circle of Franconia, warning them, with menaces in case of non-compliance, not to furnish troops to the French Princes, nor to suffer the French Emigrants to assemble in arms, or in any considerable number, in their States.—Referred to the High National Court at Orleans.

CIRCULAR LETTER

Of the new Minister at War to the Army.

"COMRADES,

"IN becoming Minister, I shall not cease to be a citizen-soldier. It is with you, it is by you, that I shall defend the cause of liberty and of equality, which unite all citizens as brothers, and which can never be modified but for the public good. It is thus that in our state we become in our turns superior to one another; as it is necessary to give command, that we may give direction to the general force and will. Be therefore obedient to your chiefs, because the common interest requires it of you, and the public welfare depends on it. I shall never separate myself from good citizens, and the love of liberty shall never depart from my bosom. In the department of the North, a part of the electoral body called me to the Legislature, and I obtained at Paris a flattering proof of the confidence of my fellow-citizens when they appointed me commandant of the Fourth Legion. I call to recollection these titles with more pride than the slaves of despotism think of theirs, and I recall them only as the means of acquiring anew public esteem and confidence, which are the only rewards of the friend of Liberty and the Laws.

"I add to the expression of my particular sentiments, my dear Comrades, the hope which I receive from the patriotism of our Legislators, and the steady mind, the unalterable resolution which the King, our Chief, manifests never to cease to support our Constitution.
