Then I may be assured that I have been followed," said-our hero; "for I suspected it while on my way thither."

"And if such he the case," said Bellerus, we shall hear more from it." "But before we wait for that we'll take some steps of our own, cried lanthe. "Some safe hiding-place must be found." Alaric was upon the point of speaking when a loud knocking was heard without, and a voice demanded entrance, in the name of the king.

"Fly! fly!" cried lanthe, seizing her lover by the arm. "Hold," spoke Bellerus, who became calm in the presence of this necessity. "If he flies he will not escape now, for our house may be watched upon all hands; and if he is caught in the act of ficeing, a deeper and more deadly suspicion may fasten upon him."

Another thundering knock was heard, Believus started towards the door.

and with him came four soldiers. They were stout, hard-looking men, whose hearts performed no other office than to furnish them with animal life that they might do the bidding of their master. One, who wore the uniform of a lieued into our hero's face.

Alaric hesitated for a moment, but during that short moment his mind was made up. He quickly judged that any falsehood might only ujure him, and he resolved to tell the whole truth. "I did." he answered.

"But why is this ?" "Because the king has so commanded."

"Shall I see him to-night?" "We came not to answer questions—only to command your attendance at the palace," said the lieutenant, groffly. Our gracious monarch will evidently see you to-night," interposed Bellerus, who saw the flash of indignation in Alaric's eye, and feared that he might make matters worse by giving way to his feelings. The youth saw the old man's meaning and he ourbed his rising emotions.

"Are you ready to go?" asked the officer. At any moment. "Then we have nothing further to detain us

Alaric put on his cap, and as they passed out through the narrow passage Bellerus found an opportunity to whisper in his ear:
"Be cautious—keep a guard upon your tongue-mention not lanthe's name, nor suffer any affusion to her to drop from your tongue.

Let us hope that the danger is not great." And yet there was a tremulousness in his tone—a terror in his very breathing—that belied the words of hope he spoke. Until this moment the youth had not falt serious alarm, but, as he chught the look of horror upon the honest artisan's face, the bolt struck his own "The gods be with thee!" spoks Bellerus, as

But Alaric made no reply. At that moment a weighty thought was upon him, and before he could call his senses back for an answer he was hurried out into the street. The officer walked by his side, while one of the soldiers led the way, and the other two fell in behind.

DARKNESS AND DOOM. Pyrrho, king of Sicily, sat upon his throne of gold and precious stones, and about him were a The youth was not long in making up his few of the hardened, cruel, subservient men mind that he had been doomed to death. He whom he dared to trust. He was a middle-aged mine: short and clumsy in stature; with a face broad and brutal in its expression, and strongly marked by dissipation and debauchery. If he had ever possessed the assurance of a brave man, he had lost it now, and his only hopes of safety were in the willing swords about him, Alaric was inclined to blame himself for wase. he had done; but when he came to reflect upon The light from three huge chandiliers of massive gold cast a strange lustre over the large apartment—the beams being here reflected from polished mirrors; there from pillars of marble and porphyry; and anon taking deeper huss from the gaudy tapestry that hung upon the walls.

Al would like to know who this stranger can be," said the monarch, turning to his chamberlain. "Ah-here comes the lieutenant. We shall see."

There was a movement among the guard at officer approached the throne, leading Alario by Pyrrho's face. "Alarie! Alarie! What Alarie art thou?" "Hold sire," interposed the chamberlain, who had been regarding the youth narrowly. "Me-

"Ha! Now by the gods, I know him!" cried the king starting from his seat, but quickly sinking back again. "Art thou the son of the patrician Orneus ?" "When my noble father lived I was his son, the prisoner replied. And when your noble father died you fied from the country?" said the monarch, with sarcastic emphasis upon the words he had repeated from the youth's speech. "I did fice," was the reply.

"And have you been absent ever since?" "I have." "Where?" "In Greece:"

"Why hast thou returned now ?"

"To see the land of my birth." "Who came with thee ?" "I landed alone upon those shores, your ma esty, and had no thought but to find a friend; and then if need be; to leave the the country again:

"And who is the friend you sought?" "A bosom friend of my early youth, whose influence extends not beyond the walls of her home.'

"Ah-a female, ch?"

"And lives she with the artisan Bellerus?" "I went there to seek her!" "And there you found her?" "I heard of her there."

"Answer me!" cried the king in a voice rage. "By the sacred crown of Jupiter, thou hadst better bite off thine own head than answer me again as thou hast done. Who is the maiden thou hast come to seek?"

Alaric hesitated ere he replied to this. remembered the warning he had received from Bellerus, and he began to feel that he had been too rash in his speech. But he had no choice now. If he refused to answer, the king could easily send to the dwelling of the mason, and thus matters might be only made worse. "She is the daughter of Bellerus," he finally

The monarch gazed into the youth's face for some moments without speaking. There was a look of deadly meaning upon his hard features, and his fingers moved nervously over his knees. At length he turned to his chamberlain, and said: "This is a curious freak of circumstance.-

Then turning to Alaric, he added: "Since I have had the brought hither against thy will, thou shalt be provided for during the night." "I can easily provide for myself, sire."

"Aye-but we do not choose that thou shouldsto be put to that inconvenience. We have room enough, and to spare; and it will afford us true gratification to know that thou art cared for." Alaric could not mistake the meaning of these words. The look which accompanied them was a sufficient key to their import. But he could do nothing now to help himself. He could only trust to circumstances as they should present The king called one of his officers to his side and whispered something into his ear, and then turned once more to the youth. "It is waxing late now, and we all have need of rest," he said; "so thou shalt be conducted to a place of safety until the morrow." "But, sire," interposed our hero, "why should you keep me here to night? I can be found when you want me." "We are not so sure of that. But it is our will that you remain. Hippon, you will conduct him to a place of rest, and report to me when thou hast done it."

The man thus addressed approached our hero, and placed his hand upon his arm. "Come," he said.

Alaric started as he heard the tones of that roice, for they sounded like a knell. The word was not spoken as speaks one who leads a guest to a quiet chamber. "Go with him," spoke the king.

Alaric turned, and was led away. In an an-teroom his conductor was joined by four dark, sinister-looking men, who hed more the appearance of common ruffishs than waiters upon a king, and then he was seized by both his arms, and hurried on through a vaulted passage to a dimly-lighted corridor. Presently the officer, who was Hippon, the jailer, stopped at a deep niche, where a guard was posted, and produced a torch, by the glaring light of which he led on once more.

The above is the commencement of Mr. Cozz's great story, which is now being published in the New York Ledger. We give this as a sample; but it is only the beginding of this most interes-ting, fascinating and absorbing tale—the balance or continuation of it can only be found in the New York Ledger, the great family paper, for which the most popular writers in the country contribute, and which can be found at all the stores throughout the city and country, where papers are bold. Remember and ask for the New York Ledger of November 18, and in it you will get the continuation of the story from where it leaves off here. to which the race of man is subject, as careful analysis and long and painful experience have clearly proven that it contains certain norcotic and poisonous properties most dangerous in their effects, which by entering into the blood derange the functions and operations of the Heart, causing many to suppose that organ to be seriously diseased.

TOBACCO affects also the entire nervous system, manifeeting itself—as all who have ever used the noxious weed will bear testimony—in Lassitude, Nervous Irritability, Water Brash, Dyspepsia, and many other disorders of a
