HARRISBURG, March 6, 1860. Gentlemen :-- Following the great moving mass on Tuesday of last week, the evening found me ensconsed in comfortable quarters at the house of a certain Dutch John, in the Diamond in Reading. The crowd, of course, was dremendous, and on a careful survey I found nearly every prominent Democrat in the Riste on hand, and as soon as I ascertained that the supply of lager was celculated for a three days' siege. I was satisfied that there would be a grand harmonization of the elements-but I must confess that I was upprepared to see the turn affairs took on Thursday morning. I would have staked a year's services to the State in the Western Penitentiary against a mess of pettage that Witte would be the nominee. Of course I always was a warm and ardent friend of Henry

The following humorous illustration of the This Convention met last Wednesday at Read-Ethiopian characteristic of Sanford, we copy ing. There was a full representation of Delefrom a Georgis paper, but originally appeared in one of the Richmond papers :--During the recent successful engagement of Sanford's great Philadelphia Nigger Opera Troupe, at Richmond, Va., the city was full of strangers from the country, and among the rest, was one Mr. Charles Intelest from hairman, with a number of secretaries. The list of Delegates was called over ; several districts were represented by two sets of Delegates, Charles Lotley, from one of the central coun-ties of the State. Mr. L. belonged, of course, vhose seates were disputed, and created considerable confusion. After they had got through to one of the "F. F. V." and was a very sensiwith the disputed seats, Wm. H. Welsh, of York ble man at home, and much thought of by his neighbors. He was, however, much set in his way, and when he once took a notion, however On taking the chair, Mr. Welsh addressed the wrong, it was next to impossible to set him right. He owned quite a number of slaves, one of whom had recently absconded to parts unknown. The lost darkie was one of great value, not only on account of his intelligence, but also for his honesty. It so happened that while in Richmond on the oceasion referred to, bir. Loxley went with a friend to while away an hour at Sanford's exhibition. They reached the place, paid their fare, and were quietly seated awaiting the appearten-all party differences banished. Let the ance of the troupe-which at length came out, dead bury the dead-let all keep step to the took their places and the performance began .--In looking around, his friend saw Loxley apparently under much excitement, in the act of rising, with an earnest look towards the stage. On asking what was the matter, L. replied, . That fellow with the tamborine is my Josh.' His friend thought he was mistaken, and tried to convince him of his error-but no, nothing would do; he was certain that the nigger was his Josh, and have him he would before he slept. The most his friend could do was to provail upon him to allow the performance to go on till its close. Just before the termination, 125 however. Loxley went put and returned with a warrant and proper officers to execute it, and when the curtain fell the posse rushed upon the stage, seized Sanford, and before he had time to wash off the burnt cork, had him properly handcuffed and secured. Sanford did not show the least alarm, confident that he could soon wash out the dark insinuation that he was "my Josh." When Loxley called him "Josh," Sanford, for his own reason, always answered "massa," and in the peculiar way of doing which made L. yet more sure that he had found his boy. After Sanford had asked permission to bring his "other clothes" in a bundle, they went to the Alderman's office, where Mr. Loxley made a solemn oath that the man was his slave "Josh." He knew him by his general appearance, and he knew him by his voice .-Upon such positive evidence, and considering the respectable character of the claimant, the Alderman had but one course, and poor Sanford was handed over to " durance vile."

Of course those acquainted with the renowned performer, richly enjoyed each turn the farce took, and were on tip-toe awaiting the denoument, and of course they followed him as he demurely walked handcuffed aside of his master, to the hotel. Arriving there, Sanford said ' Massa Charles, please let me wash de dust out out of my eyes, and take off dese good close.' Loxley agreed to this, but would not permit him to go out of his sight. Water was procured and Sanford had scarcely commenced his ablutions, ere the bystanders raised such a shout of laughter at Loxley's expense, as was never heard before in the "Old Dominion." Sanford was metamorphosed in an instant. His color, voice, gait and demeanor were all changed in a twinkle, and from an old greasy negro he came
