At present writing we have indications of pleasant weather, but we would not be willing to rely upon the predictions of the best weather prophet we know, as to what it will be upon to-morrow.

TURNING THE TABLES. We heard a good story the other day, which will bear publication, suppressing names, and comes appropristely under the above head. Two of our cititens, whose stables are contiguous, kept each a cow. The first, whom we will style Bob, had enough provender laid up for his cow, during the winter, while the second, whom we will call Pete, had "nary bit." Several mornings, on going to his stable. Bob discovered hay strewn Riong the alley between his stable and! that of his neighbor Pete's, and imagined that his supply was disappearing more rapidly than it should. Circumstances looked rather suspicious Bob mentioned his suspicions to his family, and intimated that he would speak to Pete about it in case he discovered anything further. It is not certainly known, but it is presumed, that Pete got to hear of Beb a suspicions and intentions, in order to "turn the tables" upon him, he appeared at Bob's stable one morning, wher there was considerable hay strewn along the alley, and sent one of his boys into the house to invite him out. Bob made his appearance and l'ete opened the conversation by asking what meant all that hay strewn along the alley .-Bob answered that he did not exactly know, but it looked rather suspicious. Well, said Pete, "it looks a good deal as if hay had been carried from my stable to yours." This was more than Bob could brook, and he was not slow in intimating that if Pete ever laid such a charge to his account again, he would give him an effectual boot application in a region about half way between his head and heels, and that it would not take much to make him do it then. Hete took Bob's word for the deed and moved off. How Pete's cow has fared since we have not learned, but Bob will admit that the tables were effectually turned upon him that time.

GIFT BOOK STORE IN ALTGONA. We understand that a branch of Melvin's celebrated Gift Book Store will open in Altoons to day to remain a few weeks. This branch has been in Harrisburg during the winter, where the sales have given universal satisfaction, meriting the approbation of the people and the press. Mr. Melvin has certificates from several persons who received Gold and Silver Watches in Harrisburg, and doubtless as his sale progresses here our citizens will occasionally find themselves equally fortunate. Mr. Melvin wishes it dislingtly understood that he has no connection with any Gift Book Store ever before held in this town, and that his sale is conducted on a as not been able to secure a more commodious

We hope the present Board of Coungitmen are in carnest, and that they intend to enforce the Ordinance and live up to the resolution. Previous Boards, have attempted to enforce the Ordinance referred to, but for some reason, failed. We have repeatedly urged upon the Council to have the matter attended to, but so little action having been taken thereon, we thought this Ordinance a dead letter, and dropped the subject. There is no use in passeng Ordinances unless they are enforced, and there is no use in having a Board of Councilmen unless they attend to enforcing the Ordinances .-We hope to note a spirit of determined action on the part of the present Board: and while they will no doubt receive the censure of some, they will receive the thanks of the majority for doing their duty.

BARRETT'S GRANNARS.-W. E. Jones, agent for the above named work, is now in this place taking subscribers therefor. It is a book which should be in the hands of every person. Li contains a perfect English, Latin, Greek, German, Spanish and French Grammar; and by their connection in one volume the different languages are easily understood and the relative meaning of words soon discovered. The chief attraction of the work is its simplicity adapting itself to the uneducated as well as the educated. Every one who can should procure a copy of the book. Price $2.25.
