The Next Move.

despatches from Washington have led us to believe that the evacuation of Fort Sumter has been, or will be, decided upon by the President. All the military men about Washington, and the Cabinet, with one or two exceptions, think the Fort must, of necessity, be given up, and it now remains with the President to say whether it shall be evacuated or re-inforced. Major Anderson informed the Government some six or eight days since, that he had only about fifteen days provision and coal on hand, and he must either be supplied or removed. To attempt to give him supplies or re-inforcements would, in his opinion, bring about a collision which would require a heavy force of men, more than the government could at this timecommand. In view of this it is thought that Fort Sumpter will be evacuated and since the organization of the United States thousand dollars. Navy. A PREDICTION.—The National Intelligencer diction, which we base on long observation of political events occurring in the successive of the federal government. And the prediction we make is, that if the ordinary current of our political history is not, disturbed by some extraneous influences, rendering the Presidential term of Mr. Lincoln entirely exceptional in its complexion and results, it is pretty sure, in about the same degree, to disappoint the exaggerated expectations of too ardent friends, and the exaggerated apprehensions of its too suspicious opponents. For no administration, so far as we are aware, has ever yet accomplished all the good expected at its hands by the former, apprehensions often inspired by other considerations than simple, disinterested patriotism.

> GARTA AFTER THE SIEGE.—The Genoa Garette publishes a letter from Gheta containing town when the Piedmontese troops took possession of it :- I have just entered Gaeta, and it is almost impossible to imagine its deplorable condition. In the square one absolutely walks on iron. It is even difficult to get along the streets, so obstructed are they with the ruins of houses knocked down by shot and shells. Here and there I saw men wheeling barrows containing the mangled remains of bodies extricated from the ruins. One poor woman was got out still living from under the fallen walls of a house, where she had lain several days with a broken leg. A wounded soldier was also found dying doned in the midst of the confusion by the last bombardment. But the worst scene of all is the Transylvania battery, which was blown up by the explosion of the powder magazines. The walls thrown down, the very rocks riven, and the ground strewn with shells and grenndes, present a sight which really makes one shudder. It is evident that if the siege had lasted another month Gaeta would have been utterly destroyed. The number of sick and wounded in the town

They were drawn up along the street in front of a building in course of construction, and close in their rear was a long mortar bed, two feet deep, with that plastic composition. ready for the workmen. The space between the files for the passage of the carriages being rather narrow, the officer ordered his men to take a step back. They did so, but about twenty feet of "sogers" instantaneously disappeared from sight backwards, and the front file. in close order, preventing the rear rank from recovering themselves when their heels stumbled against the mortar bed.
