A BULLET EXTRACTOR -Brigade Surgeon and Medical Director. U. S A., J. Quidor, has invented an instantaneous bullet extractor. It consists essentially of a metallic cylinder, closed at one end; to the other of which is attached a bellshaped, India-rubber mouth-piece, or suck-Within this cylinder is a tube containing metallic mercury, with a valve at its lower extremity. To the upper extremity of the cylinder is attached an exhauster or air-pump. In using the instrument the mouth-piece is applied over the orifice of the wound, the tube projecting a short distance within it, and the air exhansted. If the ball is simply imbedded in the soft structure, the expansion of the
