THE SMITH OF RAGENBACK.

In the Principality of Mohenlohe, Laugenburg, is a village called Ragenbach, where about twontimeses agothe following heartrending but heroic event took place. One afternoon in the early spring or autumn, my kind informant did not exactly know which, in the tavern room of Ragenbach, several from an article in "Household Works":" what would happen on that eventful day. The smith formed one of the morry company, a strong; vigorous man, with a resolute such a good natured smile upon his lips that ery cvil, disposed person shunned him, for the valiant smith would allow nothing wrong in his presence, and it was not advisable to that low could equal his strength of body:

The brave smith sat near the door chatting with que of his peighbors, I know not what: all at ouce the door sprung open, and a large dog came staggering into the room, a great, strong, powerful beast, with a fero nious, frightful aspect, his head was hanging down and his eyes bloodshot, his red loxed tongue hanging half-way out of his room out of which there was no escape but by one door. Scarcely had the smith's neighbor, who was bathkeeper of the place, seen the animal, when he became deathly

Then rose an outery! The room was full of men and women, and the foaming beast stood before the only entrance; he one could leave without passing him. He snapped savagely right and left, and no one ounce of prevention in this fatal disease in some of prevention in this fatal disease in done of the some of the fatal disease in the fatal disease in the fatal disease in some of the fatal disease in the fatal disease in s could pass him without being bitten. This the people, it flashed across his mind how many of his happy and contented neighbors would be made miserable by a mad dog, and he formed a resolution, the like of which is scarcely to be found in the history of the human race for high-inindedness and nobleness. Certainly his brown check paled a little, but his eyes sparkled with divine fire, and an elevated resolution shone from the smooth brow of the simple minded
