NEW AGRICULTURAL SETTLEMENT.
TO ALL WANTING FARMS, A RARE OPPORTUNITY OF A DELICIOUS AND HEALTHY CLIMATE TWENTY-FIVE MILES SOUTH OF PHILADELPHIA, ON THE CAMDEN ROAD, NEW JERSEY.
An old established settlement of several thousands of acres of productive land has been divided into farms of various sizes, from one to five hundred acres, and the population of some Fifty Hundred, from various parts of the middle States and New England have settled there. The soil is rich, the climate is healthy, and the crops are abundant. The price of the land is at the low sum of $10 to $20 per acre, the soil is of the best quality for the production of Wheat, Clover, Potatoes, Apples, Grapes and Vegetables. It is considered THE BEST FRUIT SOIL IN THE UNION. The place is perfectly secure from frost, the best mode of agriculture is here, and the soil is so fertile that it will grow any crop and be successful. By examining the place itself, a correct judgment can be formed of the productive capacity of the land. The land is made easy to secure the rapid improvement of the land, which is only sold for actual improvement. The result is that within the past year, some three hundred houses have been erected, two miles, one steam, four stores, some forty yards and Peach Orchards, planted, and a large number of other improvements, making it a desirable and active place of business.

THE MARKET.
As the reader may perceive from inspection, in the leading here, the settler has many advantages. Produce being double the price than in the States away from the West. It is known that the soil is rich, and the climate is healthy, and the crops are abundant. HORRIBLE TRAGEDY.
TRACES OF THE MURDERER.
HIS FLIGHT AND PURSUIT.
The community was horrified yesterday by the accounts, in the morning papers, of the discovery of the bloody spectacle presented on board the E. A. Johnston. No doubt could be entertained but that a most foul and wholesale slaughter of human life had been there perpetrated. The vessel reeked with blood from stem to stern. She was found abandoned in the lower Bay, early Wednesday morning, by the crew of the schooner Telegraph, and afterward towed up to the city, by the steaming Ceres and moored in Fulton Market slip. No person, living or dead, was on her when she was discovered, although she had left Keyport on last Sunday night, bound for Deep River, Va., and a cargo of oysters, with a crew of the following persons: George Burr, Captain; Nathaniel Clark, mate; Samuel Wain and Oliver Wain, hands.

On examination of the stern of the ship it was discovered that the tackle was lowered to the water's edge, and the small boat usually hung there, had been taken away. Shortly after her arrival and inspection by the Coroner, Captain Nickerson, of the schooner John B. Mather, of Dennis, Mass., reported that at 4 or 5 o'clock on Wednesday morning, while at anchor in the lower Bay, he saw a small boat, with a man on board, who was apparently in a hurry to get away. The man was dressed in a dark coat and cap, and was carrying a bundle. The boat was seen to pass the Johnston, and was followed by the schooner. The man was seen to get into a small boat, and was followed by the schooner. The man was seen to get into a small boat, and was followed by the schooner. The man was seen to get into a small boat, and was followed by the schooner.

operation, which render his immediate capture highly probable, but the facts which it is prudent to narrate are as follows: It is considered almost certain that the mate who was engaged by Capt. Burr and the owner, just before the vessel sailed, and whose name, Nicholas Clark, is assumed, murdered his three associates, compelled by the thousand dollars in the possession of the Captain; that the murderers were committed shortly after midnight on Wednesday morning; that the murderer possessed himself of the coveted booty, and made for land in the sloop's yawl. He reached some point on the Staten Island shore at an early hour on Wednesday morning, arrived at what is known as the lower Bay, and was followed by the schooner. The man was seen to get into a small boat, and was followed by the schooner. The man was seen to get into a small boat, and was followed by the schooner. The man was seen to get into a small boat, and was followed by the schooner.

While waiting for the boat, he got into conversation with the bridge or dock keeper at the landing, Abram Ebert, and asked him where a fellow could get anything to eat and drink. He was directed to a small oyster-saloon just at the landing, where he went, sat down, and held a conversation with the boy in charge of the saloon. The saloon is kept by Peter Van Pelt, and the boy's name is Augustus Giesler. If he intended that he was in a hurry to get up to the city, and was sorry that he had missed the first boat, he engaged for two drinks of hot gin, and two eggs, to pay for which he handed a quarter of a dollar. He then asked how many more eggs were on board, the boy told him that there were four more. He then asked Mr. Van Pelt if he could make an oyster stew, of which query he received an answer in the affirmative. The stew was served up in about ten minutes. He then called for another egg, which having disposed of, he handed out a quarter of a dollar, desiring to be changed. He then asked the boy Augustus to accept of a ten-dollar gold piece; the boy thought he was joking and refused to accept the money. He then refused to receive the change from the quarter, which he had previously handed in payment for the oysters, and said he would take a cigar instead of the change. This was about 6 o'clock.

The boy says that he then "threw the boat" to be secured, and not to shoot himself, as he had plenty of money and could pay for everything he bought. He had on a black coat with a green pocket, a pair of gray pants, and a hat with a plume. He carried in his right hand a clothes-bag, apparently well filled. Two harbor police officers have been engaged actively and anxiously in efforts to trace the murderer or murderers of the captain and crew of the sloop. Their names are Thomas N. James and Theodore Burdett. At an early hour yesterday they ascertained that the fugitive had come up to the city on the Staten Island boat Southfield, and that he arrived at the Battery about 7 o'clock on the morning of Wednesday. While on board the Southfield he made the acquaintance of one of the deck hands, on whom he impressed a story of his being shipwrecked in the Bay, and his hurry to the city in consequence. After showing a bag full of money, (about the size of a shot bag), he went on to say that he was the Captain and owner of a sloop named William Tell; that a schooner had run into them that morning and in the collision, one man had been killed by the bowsprit, which forced inward, punched him in the stomach against the mast, distributing his entrails all over the deck, and whether the other man got on board the schooner or not, he could not tell; he did not see where he went or what became of him; he had not seen him since. At the time of the collision he was below in the cabin asleep; when he awoke he ran on deck, went forward and found the sloop sinking. He immediately returned to the cabin, secured his clothes, and the "needful." When speaking of the "needful" he exhibited the bag of money. At this juncture, he requested the deck-hand to count his money for him, as he was fearful that he had been imposed upon by some person with whom he had been doing business. The deck-hand proceeded to count the specie, but only got through with the gold, which consisted of two ten-dollar gold pieces and two five-dollar gold pieces. All the rest was in silver, and looked as if it might amount to $300.

The officers also ascertained that when taking his stew in the saloon at the landing on Staten Island he kept a vigilant lookout from the window toward the Narrows. He said he was in a great hurry to get up to the city to charter a towboat and try if he could save the sloop. When asked whereabouts he left the sloop, he replied, "God knows where she is now; I will be all right if I can only get up to the city." Yesterday afternoon our reporter, in company with the two police officers already named, started for Staten Island in search of the yawl, information having been given by Mr. A. C. Entrikin, overseer at Fort Tompkins, to the effect that a small boat had been landed near the Fort early in the morning, under suspicious circumstances. At 7 o'clock last evening the exploring party found the yawl lying on the shore, high and dry, immediately on the south side of the new Fort Tompkins. The stable-keeper connected with the Fort had seen the man leave the boat and take the road for the lower landing. He met him about 6 o'clock, or, probably, a short time earlier, when he asked him if his boat would be all safe down there? The hostler replied that no one would disturb the boat as he was in that vicinity to meddle with it. He said that the man in question had with him a bag, like a food-bag, apparently well stuffed with clothing, and had a sort of glazed cap on his head. He seemed very anxious and uneasy. After the stranger had left, the hostler went down to the boat on the beach, in which he found a beam, the tiler for the beam, two oars, and a large-sized boot for the right foot. The boot was tastefully lined with red leather, and is supposed to have belonged to the captain. He took the oars and the boot up to the stables, where they were found last night, and delivered to the officers. Having got all the articles, the snow was swept from the seats of the yawl, and the party proceeded toward the city, but owing to a high wind and blizzardous sea, accompanied by a very heavy fall of snow, and severe cold, they were obliged to put into Bay Ridge, on the Long Island shore, the place where the inquest was held upon Fanny Dean Halsey. The officers, our reporter, and the boy Giesler, then took the cars for South Ferry, and arrived in this city between 10 and 11 o'clock.
