GARDEN CULTURE.

VEGETABLE GARDEN.—One of the most important operations in the garden is frequent stirring of the soil, and the facility presented for this periodical culture is one of the strongest arguments in favor of drill cropping as opposed to the now almost obsolete system of broad cast.

It allows the grasses of the atmosphere to reach the soil surrounding the roots of plants, facilitating the decomposition and preparation of the food of plants. Such tender crops as Lima beans, Egg plant, Sweet Potatoes, &c., should not be set out too early; let the soil be warm and active and a rapid, healthy, active growth will ensue.

It is best to prevent injury to melon vines from striped flies, which we have tried, is to enclose a small square around the young plants, either by placing four bricks on edge, or inserting four small pegs in the soil around the plants. A square of glass, sufficiently large to cover the space, is laid on these supports. This not only wards off the bugs, but prevents consolidation of the soil by heavy showers, and accelerates the additional warmth consequent upon the shelter thus afforded.
