BELLEFONTE, THURSDAY, MAY 23.

Corn and Cob Meal not injurious to Animals For several years past there has been much said and written, favorably and unfavorably, on grinding corn in the ear as food for stock. I have been both amused and disgusted at the recital of stories told and read by individuals.

I have fed corn and cob meal, more or less, to horses, cattle, sheep and hogs, in various forms, at all seasons of the year, for some six years, and have never seen any evil results resulting therefrom. But, on the contrary, have found it to be a saving of about one-half of the grain fed in the ordinary way, and more, if properly cooked and care be taken in feeding. I have fat-tened cattle, hogs and sheep in half the time I could on whole corn, and frequently in the coldest weather, when whole corr would not more than keep them in living order. When groun fine, I consider it better for stock than meal ground from shelled corn. It lies looser in the animal's stomach, and will not sour as pure corn meal will. I will give one illustration, to suffice for many, showing the fallacy of the danger in feeding corn and cob meal .-Five years ago this winter, I put up a poor old work ox, and fed him until spring; he was fat, but as I could not sell him for what I thought he was worth, I summered him over to the next fall; put him up again and fed him as before with corn and coh meal ; killed him the beginning of January following. A healthier animal I never saw and us for fatness, there was not a single half pound of fissh but what was streaked with fat. He was not a large animal, yet brought nearly $100 in Mount Gilead mar-I will give you his gross and net weight the day he was butchered. His gross weight was only a few pounds over 1,800. The meat, after the kidney tallow was taken out, weighed 1,000 pounds; the whole of the tallow, after being well tried out, weighed 220 pounds. So you see that the meat, tallow and hide weighed 1,357 pounds, leaving a waste of only 443 pounds not quite one fourth. If Mr. Todd or his neighbors can beat the above, through any other process of feeding, we would like to hear from them. I will close by stating that I have horses in my possession that have been fed more or less on the above kind of food from three to five years, and my neighbors will bear me witness that few horses perform more hard service.---Louisville

A gentleman being much annoved by a out that was under the table during dinner, called his servant (a recent importation) and told her to take the cat to the woodshed, shut her in, and shut the hole where she came out. Biddy did as directed, but had no sooner returned, than the cat again appeared. The gentleman inquired why she had not done as he had commanded. She replied that she had. "And did you stop the hole ?" he asked. "Faith an I did!" she replied. "What with ?" he asked. "A piece of a stovepipe, sure !" she artlessly replied.

Now, there are a good many people who will laugh at Biddy's heedlessness, and think sho was rather green. Yet many of these same persons are as heedloss as she Mr. A--, look at your mowing ma-ehine standing just where you finished haying, and your rakes and scythes hanging in the trees, and your plow rusting in the corner of the fence. Haven't you stopped a hole with a stove pipe ?

Mr. B----, see thuse cattle standing out during the storm by that hay-stack, without any shelter, exposed to the driving wind and sleet, wasting their manure and at least one-third their fodder.

How about the stovepipe in your cases? Mr. C----, look at that black stream running away from your barnyard into the road or brook, carrying away all that is of value in your manure, wasting what should be the food of future crops, impoverishing your farm and yourself with it. Are you not imitating Biddy this time? Mr. -----, look at those cattle--how poo they are. You have been selling hay and grain, and feeding nothing but straw to your cattle ; they have consequently come out "spring poor." It will take them all summer to recruit. They will be behind the market, and you cannot sell them for half what your neighbors are selling them for. How about the stovepipe?

Mr. L---, look at those boards off your barns, your doors lying on their sides, those holes through the roof, through which the rain wets rots your grain and hay The money and time you spent at that horse-race last week would have repaired your barn. Don't you think you have stopped a cat hole with a storspipe?

Farmers, have not all some hole about our premises stopped with a stovepipe? A farmer's profits are in inverse ratio to his outgoes, and the fewer holes he stops with stovepipes, the greater will be the balance in his favor at the and of the year, Rural American.
