away, No sister, heart broken, shed a tear o'er the grave Of a brother who died his country to save.

The soldier who fought so bravely that day, Shed a tear when he died from home far away; His eyes looked to Heaven—his heart broko with paia, He eried "'0, my mother, could I see you again!' No mother was near him, no father to bless, No sister's kind word to ease his distress; May God rest the soul of the soldier so brave, Who sleeps his last sleep where the bright waters ware.

Tread lightly that sacred spot; peace to his bones; God ever was with him—He heard all his monas; Speak of him kindly—he's now with the blest, Tho' his bones are all mould'ring, his soul is at
