The Drafted Wide-Awake.

I was a glorious Wide-Awake, All marching in a row; And were a shiny oil-cloth cape, About two years ago. Our torches flared with turpentine,

And fliled the streets with smoke;
And we were sure, whate'er might comeSecssion was a joke.
O. if I then had only dreamed, The things that now I know, I ne'er had been a Wide-Awake, About two years ago.

I said the South would never dare I said the South would never daro
To strike a single blow;
I thought that they were cowards then,
About two years ago.
And so I marched behind a rail,
Armed with a wedge and man;
With honest Abe upon a flag,
A boatman gaunt and tail.
O, if I then had only dreamed
The things which now I know,
I ne'er had been a Wide-Awake
About two years ago.

My work was good, my wages high,
And bread and coal was low;
The silver jingled in my purse
About two years ago.
In peace my wife and children dwelt,
Happy the live-long day,
And war was but the fearful curse
Of countries for annual of the contribution of the contri

Of countries far away.
O, if I then had only dreamed
The things which now I know,
I ne'er had been a Wide-Awrke About two years ago: My wife sits pale and crying now,

I did not think to go war

About two years ago.

And no one now will earn their food,

No one will be their shield:
God help them when I lie in death
Upon the bloody field!

O, if I then had only dreamed
The things which now I know,
I ne'er had been a Wide Awake

About two years ago. About two years ago.

One brother's bones half buried lie Near the Antictam's flow : He was a merry, happy lad About two years ago.
And when the Chickahominy
Moves slow towards the sea, Was left another's wasted corpse-I am the last of three.

O, if I then had only dreamed
The things which now I know,
I ne'er had been a Wide-Awako About two years ago.

Just now I saw my torch and cape. Which once made such a show;
They are not now what once they see
About two years ago.
I thought I carried Freedom's light In that smoky, flaming brand;
I've learned I bore destruction torch—
That wedge has split the land.
O. if I then had only dreamed
The things which now I know,
I no er-had been a Wide-Awake

The pastures are gnawed very close, and even the aftermath of the Tribune indicates were for bad husbandry upon any land, and especially upon that recentand especially upon that recently seeded with herds-grass. This grass, as is well known to all careful observers, has a bulbous root, and the fine roots that shoot out from the bottom are not as strong as the roots of most other grasses. It is, therefore, exceedingly liable to be torn out by the roots by grazing cattle, especially if the grass is short. In close cropped meadow, where this grass has been sown, nothing is more common than to see thousands of thesedried bulbs lying upon
