A LOVE SONG. BY JOE W. FUREY.

I know a maiden fair and bright Who wears a snow-white plume; Whose presence makes dark places light, And drives away their gloom. II.

She walks the streets with modest grace And smiles that light her gentle face Like sunshine, come and go III.

Her soft hand's touch is wondrous joy,

Her clasp, a world of bliss; Her smile is love without alloy, And life, her maiden kiss IV.

Oh! precious more this maid to me Than mines of wealth untold And dearer far, her purity, Than gems of rarest gold!

Who is this maiden fair and bright, That wears this plume of snow, Whose presence lends such joyous light.
To all the vale below?

Ah! ask me not-I would not speak To vulgar crowds her name 'd scarce inscribe it on the peak Of Heaven's ORIFLAMME! BELLEFONTE. PA., Feb. 2d., 1863.

THE MOST UNREASONING DELU-SION THE WORLD EVER SAW. In the painful progress of our race tow

compare for a moment with the monstrous unreason and bloody stupidity of the existing Thase or condition of the American people. The British Aristocracy waged a war of twenty five years to crush the Democraor of France, and thus to 'save' their own principles," that was to keep the great ignorant, voteless and voiceless mas-es from comprehending their natural rights, and thus to hold them in abject submission to the rucools of their own deadly warfare agains the great body of the Spanish people. When on crushed out the miserable and de lauched Bourtons, and introduced extensive and benificent reforms in that priest ridden as ever the French themselves fought for dom, bravery, intelligence and progress of the American people, and the times we live in, this civil war is, without doubt, the mes amazing and boundless folly ever yet wit
