The Cost of the War per Day.

It is now quite certain that the cost of the war is nlump four millions of dollars per day, if it will not reach five millions. This appaling truth we learn from perusing the columns of the Daybook. When the Democratic papers before the election charged t' at the expenses were three millions of dollars per day, the as-September 30, 1864, was $353,061 31. ber of days, and it gives $3,809,737 at the expenditure per day!. It is the same silly, endless folly of history repeating itself. Experience keeps a dear school, but fools will learn in no other. What a sorrowful spectacle, however, to see this glorious country which four short years ago, was unfettere by debt, every man free as the air of heaven, and at liberty to pursue his gwe avocations, with his industry unstaxed and enterprise unchecked; now leaded down with an onerous taxation and contractors! fat cripples his energies, takes bread from his childrens mostle, clothing from sheir backs, condemns them to tenerance and its attendant evils poverty, and all for what? The New York Journal argues, in regard to the American production of gold that we are losing largely each year from the country, and our statistics show such a result beyond question. Since the first of January, 1863, we have received at New York from Californis, up to December 1st:
