With the end of the war comes the beginning of reflection, and with the beginning of reflection comes the conviction of their guilt.

A WRONG MOVE .- An exchange says that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company has passed a resolution prohibiting its agents from accepting any paper money, except United States bank-notes, in payment of either freight or fare. We suppose the Company has a right to say what sort of money it will receive, but it is certainly in bad taste to refuse to take the money of a State to which it owes its entire wealth. It has been well said that "corporations have no souls." and this mammoth concern that may now imagine it owns the State and can dictate as it pleases, may find that there is power mightier still than it. The backs in this State could buy the Pennsylvania Railroad, and carry on its business, immense as it is, without feeling the expense. It should go slow in its efforts to control money and other matters in our proud old Commonwealth.

Every one acknowledges the benefits the public derive from the Railroad, but here are none foolish enough to think it has the power or should attempt to put our State money into disrepute.

provost marshal authority is the same every-where. It is a usurpation. It is a despot-ism. It is without the least authority of law. Any act of violence done by a provost marshal is just as illegal as the abhorrent act of assassination. Attornew General Bates'letters put this rule of the provost marshals in the most startling light. We, should think that every provost marshal who reads these letters, would almost feel the oords tightening around his neck. This dis-tinguanhed member of Mr. Lincoln's Cabinat is doing his country a service, at last, which
