

The Democratic Watchman.

BELLEVILLE, PA. FRIDAY MORNING FEB. 28, 1868.

If ANDREW JOHNSON had one drop of the courage he should have, the batch of traitors, calling themselves Congress, who are striving to inaugurate another war, would find themselves marching along with the soul of JOHN BROWN in less than twenty-four hours.

Grant.

Of all the empty pig-bladders that the war has up telephoned prophecies, none was more worthy and despicable than the drunken creature whose name a few old tape measures, petticoat-sellers and gold-grabbing bondholders have raised for the Presidency.

Take him as the parent of a Digger swan and the daddy of her half breed brood, in the mountains of California.

Take him as a captain compelled to resign his commission to escape being drummed out of the service, for a trick too beastly to be mentioned.

Take him as the "attrition process" butcher of the Wilderness and Spottsylvania, where the oldest and most hardened, "rebel" veterans, swore it was a "shame to have to slaughter brave men so, even in blue uniforms."

Take him as the supposed, smoke-enveloped expiator on the merits of a Marshall Brown's pup, "the one king, lying deliverer of the President, his superior officer."

Or take him as the reeling, hiccupping, whiskey-soaker juggler for the amusement of Washington street-sweepers.

And in every attribute of his nature, every display of his character, and every phase of his life, he is and has been stupid, despicable, beastly! The accident of having been at the head of the Federal armies when the "Rebellion" collapsed, furnished his only claim to greatness or to decency. His "Military Reputation" is his sole reliance, his forlorn hope.

And the preliminary steps are being already taken to riddle this "list forty" of U. S. G.

Gen. McClelland, of Illinois, and numerous other gentlemen of ability, who are acquainted with the inside of our "our Caesar's military career," will ere long furnish the world with a few high erio suppressed items of war-history - St. Joseph, (Mo.) Vindicator.

ENGLAND STILL QUAKING - The Fenian excitement is still unabated, and notwithstanding all the efforts of the government to suppress those champions of Irish freedom, every day seems to add new strength to the organization.

What was only a pigmy in resources and prestige previous to the judicial murder of the three Fenian martyrs, is now rapidly developing into a huge giant that will not down at the bidding of wordy proclamations, or refrain from striking a blow when opportunity offers through fear of unjust and hasty prosecutions.

We are sorry to believe that Fenianism can never succeed in accomplishing the liberation of Ireland, at least in open warfare, but if it can frighten and harass John Bull into the doing of a few simple acts of justice towards that down-trodden country, its labors add its sacrifices will not have been in vain. God speed the day of Ireland's redemption from English tyranny and oppression - Ex.
