

BELLEFONTE, PA.

FRIDAY MORNING, JUNE 12, 1868.

An Incident of '76.

Night had set in deep, and in a small log cabin situated a few miles from Trenton N. J., sat five men, four of whom were seated around an old oaken table in the centre of the room engaged in playing cards, while they frequently replenished their throats with large draughts from an earthen jug that stood on the table.

They were heavily bearded, coarse looking men, and from their dress, which somewhat resembled the British uniform they were evidently Tories. The other was a stout built young man, clad in the continental uniform. He sat in one corner of the room with his face buried in his hands.

'Tom,' said one of the Tories, rising from the table and seating himself near the young prisoner, for such he evidently was, 'Tom,' you I were school boys together, and I like you yet. Now, why can't you give up your wild notions and join us. You are our prisoner, and if you don't we shall hand you over to headquarters to-morrow, while if you join us your fortunes are made, for with your bravery and talents you will soon distinguish yourself in the royal army, and after this rebellion is crushed out, your cause would be rewarded by a knighthood and promotion in the army. Now there are two alternatives; which do you choose?'

'Neither,' said the young man, raising head and looking the Tory steadily in the eye.

'I am now, you say, your prisoner, but when the clock strikes twelve I shall leave you—I shall disappear in a cloud of fire and smoke, neither you nor your comrades not even myself can prevent it. You may watch me as close as you please, tie my hand and foot if you will, but a higher power than yours or mine has ordained that I shall leave you at that time.'

'Poor fellow his mind wanders,' said the Tory, 'we'll talk differently in the morning.' And returned to his seat at the table, leaving the youth with his head again resting in his hands.

When the clock struck eleven, the young prisoner drew a pipe and some tobacco from his pocket, and asked the Tory-leader if he had any objection to his smoking.

'None in the least,' he said, adding with a laugh—that is, if you'll promise not to disappear in a cloud of tobacco smoke.'

The young man made no reply, but immediately filled and lighted his pipe, having done which, he arose and commenced pacing the floor.

He took half a dozen turns up and down each side of the room, approaching nearer the table each time, when having exhausted his pipe he returned to his seat and refilled it.

He continued to smoke until the clock struck twelve, when he arose from his seat and slowly knocking the ashes out of his pipe, said:

'There boys, it's twelve o'clock, and I must leave you. Good night!'

Immediately all around the room streaks of fire ran hissing and scurrying, the cabin was filled with dense, sulphurous smoke, amidst which was heard a clipp of thunder. The Tories sat in their chairs paralyzed with fright.

The smoke soon cleared away, but the prisoner was nowhere to be seen. The table was overturned, the window was smashed to pieces, and one chair was lying on the ground outside of the building.

The Tory leader, after recovering from his stupor, gave one glance around the room and sprang out of the window followed by his comrades. They ran through the forest at the top of their speed in the direction of the British encampment, leaving their muskets and other arms to the mercy of the flames, which had now begun to devour the cabin.

The next day two young men dressed in the Continental uniform were seen standing near the ruins of the old cabin. One was of the night previous. 'Let us hear all about it, Tom,' said the other.

'Well,' said he, 'last evening as I was passing this place, two Tories ran out of the cabin and were the promoters of me. Before I could make any resistance they took me in, and who do you suppose I saw as a leader of their party but John Barlow, my old school mate. He talked with me, and tried to induce me to join but I told him I couldn't do it—that at twelve o'clock I was going home. Disappeared in a cloud of fire and smoke; but he laughed at me and said I was one of my head.'

'About eleven o'clock I asked him if I might smoke.' He said most certainly, so I filled my pipe and lighted it, and commenced walking the floor. I had a pound of gunpowder in my pocket, and as I walked I straggled it all over the floor. When the clock struck twelve I bid them good bye, and told them I must go; and then knocking the ashes out of my pipe, the powder ignited and a dazzling flame of fire shot across, around and all over the room, filling it with suffocating smoke. Before it cleared away I hurled a chair through the window, sprang out, and departed, leaving them to their own reflections. You know the rest.'
