

The Democratic Watchman.

BELLEFONTE, PA.

Public Schools of Spring Township.

Number of school houses 9. Some of these are among the best in the county; others, however, are among the worst. The Directors propose building a new house at Bolling Spring next summer. If it is made to compare favorably with the two last erected in this Township, it will be an ornament to the locality, and reflect credit on the Board. A house with two rooms is needed here, so that the schools may be properly graded. There are still six houses destitute of the necessary outbuildings. Seven have sufficient grounds, but none suitably improved. All are supplied with suitable furniture, except the fair ground school, which is temporarily kept in an unfinished dwelling house. All are supplied with outline maps and globes. Writing tablets should be furnished in all.

Whole number of schools 10. One being kept open during the summer. The books are uniform, and the Bible is read daily in all. Singing is practiced in nearly all. The schools are generally not as well classified as they could be, but the teachers are making efforts to have this item attended to. Oral instruction is given in map drawing, and physiology in but two.

While most of the schools exhibit cleanliness and taste, we would suggest to a few the importance of giving more attention to this matter. Average age of teachers twenty-four years; two have taught over five years, while five have had no experience in teaching heretofore.

Why Marriage is Dying Out.

Much of the careless morality of the present day is owing to the way in which women dress. There is no caviling at the fact or pretending to ignore it, but the moderately dressed wife and mother is fast disappearing from our homes.

The domestic daughter has long since become a myth, and in her place we have a creature of hair and humps—wast hips, Grecian bend, high legged, chignonned young lady, who laughs loud and talks fast, and writes herself "Marie" or "Julie," and who is a complete success in doing nothing, except the slang literature of the day.

I think the reason young men do not marry is because girls have ceased to be domestic, and spend a great deal of money upon dress. They are not contented to live in a quiet way and dress moderately; they must go out, dress and ride, and frequent places of amusement; have suppers and bouquets, and receive adulation. It costs a great deal of money, which the young man furnishes, and he never gets ahead enough to marry; so they repeat, and try their luck over again. It is the easiest thing in the world to do with less luxury, but it involves a little self-sacrifice and economy, and these virtues are fast becoming exotic.

Fully one half of the girls who are now filling situations in stores, offices, etc., go there in the first place in order to be able to dress better. They live in plain but comfortable homes, and must help with the household or the children of their own kin; but they hear glowing accounts of the city, they want the finery that is denied them, and they want to go from those peace full home lives, to the toil and temptation of parents, to the toil and temptation of the ten-hour system. They go plain country girls, with modest, blushing cheeks and smooth, shining hair, they stay there a year or two, and their cheeks are pale and their hair is frizzed. They have lost the gauziness of blushing, and are bad at repartee. They dress somehow and live somehow; but they have hours of despondency that make them old. It is one struggle with labor and temptation, and how they preserve their integrity God only knows.

Now, would not these girls be happier as the wives of farmers and mechanics? Would not one word of genuine love outweigh a ton of admiration? Would not the smile of a little child be a thousand times better than the gaze of the libertine? Is it not easier to work for one's own than for strangers? To feel that you are king in your castle, if it is only a one story cottage? Woman's independence will work her a deadlier wrong than any bond she has ever worn. When she steps beyond the fair threshold of womanly power—the archetypal home, where God has made her sublime, to fight the demors of political or commercial life, she lays down a scepter to take up a chain, whose iron canker will eat into her soul.

"Blessed be Nothing."—The Albany Post thus sensibly replies to a statement made by the New York Herald, that during the last twenty years Wm. B. Astor had so managed a fortune of twenty millions as to roll it into sixty millions:

Suppose he has, what then? What has he made by the operation, except increased worryment to keep the run of his increased wealth? Astor, with sixty millions, eats no more oysters, quail, woodcock and boned turkey than he did when he was worth ten millions. He uses no more oysters than we do. He dresses no better, and has a thousand times less fun. We beat him on sleep, and have no law-suits with tenants and trespassers. Robbers lay for Astor every time he goes out doors after dark. They don't think of us. Astor, with sixty millions of dollars, has sixty millions of trouble. To keep the run of his rents, bonds and estates, keeps Astor in work about fourteen hours a day, and yet Astor only gets "three square meals" a day, which is just what we obtain without any millions, any tenants, any real estate, and only work eight hours per day. If men's happiness increased with their money, everybody would be justified in worshipping the Golden Calf. The happiness with their earnings up to a certain point—the point necessary to secure them the comforts of life—say $2000 a year. All beyond this is superfluous, it is productive of no good whatever. The richer the man, the greater is the probability that his son will live on billiards, and die in the inebriate asylum. With contentment and $2000 a year a man may be as a prince. Without contentment you will be miserable even if your wealth equals the rent rolls of Crusus.

"Lord Ainsley" as a Bar Keeper.

Our readers are familiar with the account of an imposition practiced upon New Yorkers by an Englishman, representing himself as "Lord Ainsley," and who married one of the wealthiest ladies in the city, and suddenly disappeared, leaving a disconsolate and an unfortunate wife, and hundreds of creditors to "mourn his loss." He has since been accidentally discovered in Boston, and a New York paper relates the following:

A gentleman who returned from Boston on Thursday, says that he saw Mr. Richard Radford, alias Lord Hubert Leroy Ainsley, who recently fled in disgrace from this city, employed as a bar keeper last week, in an obscure drinking saloon in the suburbs of that city. At first the gentleman did not recognize the would-be lord; who had evidently taken great care that no one should. Radford is much altered, and has a weary, careworn expression on his still handsome face. He had shaved off entirely his once admired golden mustache, and has probably donned a wig, as his hair is now considerably darker than when he was in the city; he was well dressed, and made desperate efforts to appear self composed. My lord (?) made a "cocktail" for our informant, which we are assured was exceedingly nice. The titled barkeeper asked the gentleman if he was from New York, what the news was, and had they heard anything from Lord Ainsley?

Radford was told that things in the metropolis were generally quiet, and even dull; that there was little if any news, except that the fellow calling himself a lord had gone to Europe. Whereupon the natty bar keeper rubbed his soft hands together and proposed another drink.

He has been forbidden the principal gambling establishments in the city, and although he has never visited Mr. Morrissey's establishment, that gentleman has repeatedly said that he would put him out if he did. Radford having been thus denied admission to the gambling establishments, has been driven to bar keeping.

Mrs. Radford has almost recovered from her recent severe illness.

Is There no Room in the Angel Land?

A short time since the writer listened to an interesting discourse by a Methodist preacher, in which he related the following incident: A mother who was preparing some flour to make into bread, left it for a few moments, when little Mary—with childish curiosity to see what it was—took hold of the dish, which fell to the floor, spilling the contents. The mother struck the child a severe blow, saying, with anger, that she was always in the way. Two weeks after little Mary sickened and died. On her death-bed, while delirious, she asked her mother if there would be no room for her among the angels. "I was always in your way, mother—I had no room for little Mary!" and will I be in the angel's way?" The broken-hearted mother then felt no sacrifice too great could she have saved her child.

Is there no room among the angels
For the spirit of your child?
Will they take your little Mary
In the host of angels?
Will they ever love me fondly
As my story book have said?
Will they build a home for Mary—
Mary numbered with the dead?
Tell me—tell me truly, mother,
Is there room for such as me?
Will I gain the home of spirits,
And the shining angels see?
I have sorely tried you, mother—
Been to you a constant care,
And you will not miss me, mother,
When I am lost among the fair.
For you have no room for Mary—
She was ever in your way,
And she fears the good will shun her—
Will they, darling mother, say
Tell me—tell me truly, mother,
Ere life's closing hour doth come,
Do you think that they will keep me
In the shining angels' home?
I was not so wayward, mother,
Not so very—very bad,
But what tender love would nourish,
And make me true to God,
Oh! I yearned for pure affection,
In this world of bitter woe,
And I long for bliss immortal,
In that land where I must go,
Tell me once again, dear mother,
Ere you take the parting loss,
Will all the angels bid me welcome
To that world of perfect bliss?

Five Negroes Lynched in Tennessee.

The five negroes who confessed the murder of Colonel Coleman, in Carroll county, Tennessee, on Sunday night, were executed at Huntington on Tuesday, before the Magistrate's Court, and sent to jail for trial at the May Term of the Circuit Court. About 10 o'clock that evening about 200 horsemen rode into the town, took the prisoners from the jail, carried them a short distance, and shot them. One of the negroes was not killed, but dropped and feigned dead; but upon attempting to escape, he returned in search of food, and was killed. The mob then rode off, carrying with them the five dead bodies, which they buried. None of those who participated in the killing were masked.

THE COMING MAN.—A Texas paper prints the following song of the Chinese:

We are coming, Father Koopmanschap,
A hundred million strong,
We will beat each man a rice bag,
And each will beat a gong.
We will drive the Samboes flying,
Before our moon-eyed hosts,
From out these golden coasts.
Then we'll take this mighty nation,
And we'll sell it for a song,
For we are coming, Father Koopmanschap,
One hundred million strong.

The first case on record of an infant girl entering a house of ill-fame for her own accord occurred a few days since at Council Bluffs, Iowa. She became tired of her hard lot, being an orphan, and evaded the gaudily-dressed girls who passed on the streets, picked up her calamities and applied for a situation, which she got. She wants to sell out now, but it is everlastingly too late.
