Excessive Taxation.

The people of this country are not likely to be reconciled to the excessive taxation with which they are oppressed, by Mr. Boutwell's monthly statement that the public debt is being decreased at the rate of half a million a day for every working day in a month and one hundred and sixty millions a year. In view of all that this generation has borne since the war of the rebellion, nearly a decade ago, it should be required to do no more henceforth than guarantee ultimate payment of the principal of the national debt and meet the interest of it as it falls due. There is certainly no necessity to extinguish the capital of the debt before maturity, and nothing less than an imperative necessity to do so could, would or should justify the Secretary of the Treasury in imposing so onerous a task upon the people. The more than one hundred millions of dollars a year that is now exacted in the form of taxes from the hard earnings of the laboring classes to pay off the public debt before it is due, would be much more beneficially employed for the general welfare if it were allowed to be used as so much cumulative capital in the productive industries of the country, while the relief of the people to that extent from taxation would at once increase their individual happiness and give them a chance to recuperate their exhausted energies and resources

It cannot be pretended that the object of the Administration in paying the public debt before maturity is an honest regard for the public credit, since that cannot suffer unless the debt is not paid when it matures, while it is both cruel and impolitic to overstrain the powers of the people to meet the exactions of the government, from a silly ambition to show that their ability to endure taxation is greater than their real obligations and necessities, enormous as those obligations and necessities are and long have been. The undisguised truth is, that party interest, and not the public interest, lies at the bottom of the policy which keeps up taxation beyond the actual wants of the government. In order to maintain a huge army of partisan officials who may be useful in carrying elections in favor of the Administration, it must be made to appear that they have something else to do, and as the majority of them are, in one way or another, tax-gatherers, taxes must be continued so that they may be retained. Evidence of this fact is found in the action of the Republican majority in Congress, in renewing the personal income tax, which as has been repeatedly and authentically shown, yields but little more to the Treasury than the cost of collecting it. Besides the obnoxiousness on all other grounds, that tax was known to be really unnecessary, and even if necessary, not productive of a net revenue to the Treasury barely sufficient to warrant the hardships attending its imposition and collection. It is, in fact, little if anything else than a tribute levied on the people of all parties for the benefit of the party that is now in power, and but for its utility in that respect, it would never have been continued. It is a particularly mean exaction, too, in the fact that it takes a final sum from the miserable residuum of income that is left to the citizen after all other taxation has reduced his resources so low that what remains is barely enough for mere subsistence. In view of the injustice, the needlessness and the general iniquity of the tax, we frankly confess that we never pay it without immediately feeling as if our pockets had been picked of so much money, and we dare say that thousands of other persons regard the amounts of which they are deprived on the same account in the light of personal losses by petty larceny. Sunday Mercury

TO THE NERVOUS.—The natural result of exhaustion of strength by excessive labor or action, is a feeling of weakness, dullness, heaviness, weariness, languor of body or mind, &c Persons of a weak constitution, or whose habits are sedentary, frequently complain of this relaxed condition of the vital energies, and when persons of a nervous temperament are thus weakened and debilitated, disease inevitably follows, unless it is at once checked and overcome. All who suffer from these causes alike require a remedy which will strengthen the system without exciting it, and awake a feeling of true enjoyment, so that life may become a source of pleasure. MISHLER'S HERB BITTERS has won its way into the confidence of thousands of this class of persons, who warmly endorse it as the best invigorating agent, and the most potent and genial of all tonics and alteratives for strengthening and restoring the physical constitution 15-34-4t
