General Robert E. Lee.

General Robert E. Lee died in Lexington, Va., at 9.30 on the morning of the 12th instant, of congestion of the brain, aged 64 years, 8 months and 23 days. From the New York World we obtain the following outline of his life.

Robert Edmund Lee was born in 1808. He was a member of the great Virginian family of the name, and was a son of Henry Lee, the "Harry Lee" of the Revolutionary War. He received his education at West Point, which he left as second in a large class, and received his commission to 1829 as second lieutenant of Engineers. He made a trip to Europe, and then devoted himself to his military duties. In 1835 he was one of the surveying expedition to fix the boundaries of Michigan and Ohio. He was made first lieutenant in September, 1836, and captain, July, 1838. He served in Mexico with the Engineers Corps, and was attached to General Wool's Corps. He got his majority at Cerro Gordo, April, 1847, received a lieutenant colonelcy after Contreras and Cherubusco, and became full colonel after Chapultepec, where he was badly wounded. Throughout the war he was constantly mentioned with the highest praise in the dispatches of General Scott, who then made up his mind to recommend him as the future commander in chief of the United States army, a decision which the old general never saw cause to change until the outbreak of the civil war in 1861.

On his return from Mexico in 1841, he was appointed Superintendent of the Military Academy at West Point, and he was also advanced to the command of the First Cavalry. At the outbreak of the civil war he denounced what course he could, until Virginia declared herself against the suppression of the rebellion by force. He then gave in his resignation and received his commission from Governor Letcher, with an important command as General of the Virginian forces, and was also made Military Governor of Richmond. At first he was employed on duty in the South, and to the organization of the army, but in the autumn of 1861 he was at Yorktown with Johnston and Magruder, when the Confederates evacuated that place. When General Joseph E. Johnston was wounded at Seven Pines, in June, Lee was appointed to succeed him, and undertook the defence of Richmond. On the 27th of June, after rallying Jackson's troops, he fought the battle of Gaines's Mill. The two generals then battered the retreating army of the Potomac under McClellan during the seven days, and at last encountered Pope on the Rappahannock, and, after three desperate days (30th 23d August), forced him back on Washington. There was now a temporary lull. Lee next crossed the Potomac and invaded Maryland. McClellan, who had been displaced, was again put in command, and with a new army he pursued Lee at Hagerstown and drove him back after two days fighting. Jackson came to his aid, and the fight of Sharpesburg and the great battle at Antietam (16th and 17th September), took place, in which General Lee was slightly wounded. Lee now fell back behind the Rappahannock. Burnside next assailed him, but was repulsed with heavy loss at Fredricksburg. Lee now entrenched himself, and defied the desperate valor of Hooker to oust him. At Chancellorsville (23d and 24th of May, 1863) he now undertook a second invasion of the North, and advanced through Pennsylvania, but was completely beaten by Meade at Gettysburg (1st 3d July, 1863), and driven back into Virginia. Richmond in the new campaign was threatened by General Grant, who pressed on steadily with an unbroken tenacity and overwhelming forces. Grant determined to win at any cost, and supported by the whole power of the North, pushed back the Confederates. In May, 1864, Lee defeated General Grant in the Wilderness, but was unable to maintain his advantages, and the Confederates were at last crushed within a circle of fire at Richmond. Lee was now made Commander in Chief of the South and maintained the war with unshaken courage and all the resources of military genius against immense superiority until March 1865. Repeated defeats and irreparable losses made resistance impossible. At last he evacuated Richmond. His army was overtaken at Appomattox Court House by Grant and Sheridan, to whom he surrendered with all the honors of war on the 9th of April. Since the war he has been held in universal respect, and received the presidentship of Washington College at Lexington. His health has been indifferent—his iron frame having given way under the immense fatigues and anxieties of his position. He was for a considerable time at the Sulphur Springs and other places of resort for invalids, but an attack of what seemed paralysis supervened a fortnight since, which filled his friends with apprehension, and the final event has justified their fears.

It is unfortunately probable that this great commander has died without leaving behind him what no one else can be expected to supply—a calm, accurate, and faithful story of his great campaigns in the civil war. He has been often urged to undertake this; but the whole subject of the civil war was so painful and so distasteful to him that he shrank from bestowing his time and his thoughts even upon a record so essential to the fair understanding of his own important share in its events. Neither his family nor his friends could overcome this feeling. He had but one wish in the latter years of his life—to aid in calming the passions of both sections, and in re-establishing order and peace throughout his native land.

A Degraded Nation.

At the late election in the border States, the great States of Ohio, Indiana, and Pennsylvania, also the more Northern States of Nebraska and Iowa, the right of suffrage, for the first time in the history of the United States, was given to the negroes, an inferior, degraded, race. The great mass of them are ignorant, and unlettered, yet apt, and imitative, people, who since the declaration of their freedom have been taught that their chief privilege and right was to vote, and to vote the Radical ticket. All this is not a direct violation of the constitution of the United States, but in direct antagonism to the State laws as well, and a degradation to the people, the honorable citizens of the States. There can be no use in attempting to disguise this fact, as it is tacitly admitted even by Radicals whenever, and wherever the test of equality is made.

The result of the elections clearly establish the fact that the Democrats in three of the four States above named have a majority of the white, or legal voters, while the Radical gains, wherever made, were only the accessions of negro votes. Another result, and a gratifying one, is that very many, including leading men, of the Irrepressible Radical party have become thoroughly disgusted and joined the ranks of the Democrats not that they love Democracy more but they could no longer abide the odious measures, and the innovations of the leaders of the party. They are not only humiliated by and ashamed of the heart of the administration, the Chief Executive, but of nearly all of the leaders, all who have and hold executive offices have thrown arms up to the very shoulder in the treasury, while the rank and file are split into so many fractions as there are States. In our section they are protectionists, in others quasi free traders then at other points, especially among the New England puritans they are subdivided into prohibitionists and anti-prohibitionists, temperance, and anti-temperance, and again in others, and they are the most formidable, the reformers, to say nothing of the endless rings of all heads every where, the whiskey ring, the coin ring, the salt ring, the land subsidy rings without number, as well as the monopolists, and the bond holders cliques, all to the increase the debts and taxes of the people, while being themselves exempt. In the meantime the Democratic party, the only true national conservatives have but to remain firm in organization, avoid all entangling alliances, eschew the isms and the amendments of the day, enter into no discussions whatever in regard to the negro and his present status, but determine to ignore all the unconstitutional acts of the party in power, and to stand firm upon the old constitution as given to us by its framers, then in the end all will be well. Louisville Daily Union.

Lee and Jackson.

There is an affecting similarity which we observe between the last words that fell from the lips of Stonewall Jackson before he passed over the river and rested under the shade of the trees, and the words reported to have been the last uttered by General Lee before he laid aside the weary cares of life and joined his late comrade in arms in the peace and blessing of the Better Country. "Tell A. P. Hill to prepare for action" were among the word Jackson babbled by Stonewall Jackson before once ordered his tent to be struck, and another time desired A. P. Hill to be sent for, and this is the report that comes to us from the death bed of Robert E. Lee. Thus did these two great and immortal Virginia chieftains show by the expressions which escaped them in the hour of delirium what is precedent dissolution, that their thoughts and memories recurred to the duties devolved upon them, and the cause of the Confederate independence so enshrined in so large a measure to the affections. Each sacrificed his splendid life in the defense of the liberties and rights of Virginia and the South. General Lee not less than General Jackson, because we are assured by one who knew the latter most intimately, it was the defeat and distress of the people which weighed with such force on his mind and heart as to break down his health and finally destroy his life. Lynchburg Virginian.
