Proverby About Women.

WHAT THE BACHELORS OF ANCIENT

DAY SAID. It is said that the proverbs of the world furnish in epitome of the wit and wisdom of all national ages. The most salient and universal traits of human nature are caught and preserved in them, as flies are preserved in am ber. The same is true of the deeply ingrained prejudices which have come own to us from a semi-barbarous time flower to the state of the stat so furnish conveyance for many ideas which do not fit the period in which we live. Old, hateful, unjust notions, about women especially, are thus kept in circulation, and show how deep was the brand of her servitude in the ages when they were coined by male in-gendity. Much of this small change genuity. Much of this small change of thought is spurious, but it is curi ous and instructive as measuring the thorough contempt men often express ed for women at the time of their servile submission to male rule. In these brief editions of would-be wisdom the intellect of women is universally deri-

He did not realize the extent of his injury at first; no pain attended it, and he even made an attempt to get up before he was removed from the plat form, saying, "No matter, I am not hurt; I will get up in a few moments.' He lived two hours, and towards the last, when reaction seemed to be taking place, and he began to feel some pain, and was told how serious his inpath, and was one now serious has in-jury was, he desired amputation to be performed. Injections of morphia were made to allay the pain, while preparations were making for the amputation, but under the effects of the morphia he seemed to decline, and not a great while after dissolution took place. His last words were, "I know that my Redeemer liveth."

A Curious Story .- A contributor n a late number of the Germantown Telegarph, furnishes the following:

'Hannah McClure, of Uwchlan Therter county, died last month in her ninety second year. Some seven yearago she became totally blind, not suddenly but by slow degrees, as though the organs of sight had become torully enteebled by long use; and thus she remained for three years. Often in passing her home, not a fourth of a mile from my residence, I have looked with pity at her groping her way back and forth along the porch, guided by the railing. Kind relatives took care of her and made her as comfortable as possible. During these three years a stubborn ulcer had broken out on one of her shoulders, and defying all efforts to heal it, was very painful, discharg ing a great deal. As it grew worse she became conscious of light on turning her eyes towards the sun, and as her sight had gone slowly and steadily it returned, and became as strong as at any time for the last thirty wears of her life, and so remained till she died No one who has not spent years in lotal darkness can conceive the delight she experienced in again beholding the light of day and viewing the old familiar scenes which she never expected to
