How Lords and Ladies Live-Racy Revelations.

About six months ago there was a Dublin as to the custody of the child of Lady Helena Newham, a daughter of the unfortunate Earl of Mount Cashell, and a most painful exhibition of bitter (celing between Lady Helens and her husband. Still more distress-ing circumstances have just been reyealed in Cork in the case of her sister Lady Louisa Morgan. Three prowere brought against Captain Richard Morgan, the husband of Lady Louisa, for the support and education of one of the defendant's children. The principal witness for the plaintiff was Lady Louisa Morgan, who stated that she had been forced to leave her husband in consequence of his persist ent and systematic cruelty. She had een separated from him several times and gone back again, but had finally separated from him in 1868. One of the occasions when she had gone back to him was in 1867, at which time he promised he would live happily with er in the future. He soon broke his promise, however, and she was com pelled to fly from the house and hide the fields, stables, or anywhere else that he was not. He used frightful language to her in the presence of the children and servants, and during the last lew months of her life with him she often had to feed the children on cold potatoes. Captain Morgan was examined in his own defence, and statal that there had been no necessity for her to leave the house for want of food. He denied having beaten her cruelly on the contrary she assaulted him fre-He admitted having quarquently. She had often stated that she had been untrue to him hundreds of times, and would be He complained of her visiting solicitor in Cork, who, he alleged had gone to see her in London. She was in the habit of associating with the groom in the stables, and came from races at night unaccompanied and so intoxicated that she could not articulate. At one time, when witness was in Jail, she used to go fishing with a man at 12 o'clock at night. The case occupied the court for three days, and the chairman, in giving judgment, said he believed the evidence of Lady Louisa Morgan. The defendant had cast imputations on her which had exatence only in his fertile imagination, and t was plain that nothing could re-torm him. The result of the trial was terestore Lady Louisa to her proper stron, and to show that the calumhas circulated concerning her were pure slanders. Decrees were granted or the education and support of the child, and the maintenance of Lady Louisa in London. It will be remembered that Lady Louisa's brother, Lord Kilworth, was a visitor in New York

An Extraordinary Execution—A Mur-derer is Allowed Twenty Days to Settle his Affairs—Appears Premptly and Meets his Doom.

A gentleman of Jonesburg, Mo, recently returned from Texas, relates an extraordinary occurence which took place a short time since in the Indian Nation. A Choctaw Indian, having committed a wilful murder, was arrest ed, tried and sentenced to be shot to death. He asked for twenty days in which to prepare and visit his friends, giving his word of honor as a "brave" to return at the appointed time, and was allowed to go forth without a guard or bail. At the expiration of twenty days, according to appointment, the hour for the execution arrived, and the Indian. true to his word, at the very hour and minute, galloped up to the place where the sentence was to be carried out, in company with three of his sisters and three brothers, all appearing as cheer ful as though they had come to a dance or a frolic. The cofin was then brought on the ground, but some one remarked that it was too small, upon which one of the doomed Indian's brothers told him to be down in it and measure, which he cheerfully did, and laughingly said, "It fits all right." The crowd meanwhile appeared to be in the most cheerful spirits, and crack ed jokes and laughed. At last, when all was ready, the doomed man was or dered to sit on the ground. A hand-kerchief was then placed over his eyes by his sister. While the Sheriff held one hand, one of the condemned Indian's brothers held the other. The Deputy Sheriff then stood in an old house, about ten steps in front of the condemned, with a rifle. From some cause the rifle went off accidentally, the bullet passing up through the root of the house. The Indian, believing he was shot, drew himself up and shuddered, but did not speak or move from the spot. A black mark was then made over his heart, with spittle and powder, by his brother, while the Deputy Sheriff reloaded his rifle, and at a signal he took steady aim, fired, and pierced the centre of the mark, The Indian, with a few struggles, fell back dead, with the brother and Sheriff still holding his hands. No one seemed to be in the least affected except the Indian's mother, who shed tears, but was told to "shut up" by her sen, that all was over.

A Touching Incident.

The world is full of mournful incidents. How hade do we know of the poignant sorrow myriads of our fellow creatures are competled to suffer. The following event is taken from the Boston Journal:

An express man upon reaching his office one cold morning in January, observed on the safe walk, a long, heavy box, which his practical eye at once identified as containing a corpse. Upon the end of the box, shivering with cold, sat a little half clad boy, about seven years of age.

Addressing him kindly, he said:

'My lad, don't sit there, you will freeze; come in and sit by the stove.' Bursting into tears the little fellow replied:

'No, I can't come my mother is in this box, and I promised her that I would not leave her until we got Deeply affected with the touching devotion of this little fellow, he finally succeded in convincing him of the en-tire safety of his precious charge, and taking him to a neighboring restaurant, gave him a warm breakfast, and then learned the particulars of his story. His father died about a year previously, in a remote village in Minnesota, leaving his mother in poor health and nearly destitute. She died but a few days before the boy's sad journey, charged the little hero with the duty of conveying her remains to her friends in a distant State, and furnished him with (all she had) a sum of money, barely sufficient to carry them both by freight cars to their destination. httle fellow had actually ridden night and day in a freight car, with his melancholy trust, never for a moment losing sight of it.

THE SHOE- BLACK'S Dog.—The following is from Chambers' 'Anecdotes of Dogs : 'An English officer, who was in Paris in 1815, mentions the case of a dog be longing to a shoe-black, who brought customers to his master. This it did in a very ingenious and scarcely honest manner. The officer, having occason to cross one of the oranges over the Scine, his boots, which had been previ-ously polished, were dirtied by a pood le dog rubbing against them. He, in consequence, went to a man who was stationed on the bridge and had them cleaned. The same circumstance having occurred more than once, his curiosity was excited, and he watched the dog. He saw him roll himself into the mud of the river, and then watched for a person with well polished boots, against which he contrived to rub himself. Finding that the shoe black was the owner of the dog, he taxed him with the artifice; and after a lit-tle hesitation, he confessed that he had taught the dog the trick in order to procure customers for himself. The officer being much struck by the dog's sagacity, purchased him and went to England. He keept him tied up in London, some time, and then released him, The dog remained with him a day or two, and then made his escape. A fort night afterwards he was found with his former master, pursuing his old trade of dirtying gentlemen's boots on the bridge.'

---- On Saturday night last Horace Greeley made a speech at Galveston, Texas, in which he said:

'I believe not so much violence occurs in Texas as in New York city."

And he might have added, Philadelphia, Boston, Cincinnati or any other Northern city.

'I can testify that property and life are safe and protected in Texas.'
Now if Texas be one of the worst of the Southern States, as is generally charged by the radicals, what is to be come of Grant's Ku Klux law? Will it remain a "dead letter on the statute book,' a monument of disgrace to its authors?-or, will our "noble President" (1) persevere until he incites the southern people to violence, and thus beget a necessity for executing his favorite law? If Grant has been guilty of nothing else to foriest the confidence of good men in his party, the Ku Klux law of itself is amply sufficient to render him odious, manifesting as it does his readiness to malign his own countrymen, so that thereby he may promote his own eather aims and purposer. -Ex.

THE LOWEST TYPE OF HUMANITY. ---The following extract is from an article on "Barbarism and Civilization," in the Atlantic Monthly :

On the island of Borneon there has been found a certain race of wild creatures, of which kindred varieties have been discovered in the Philippine Is lands, in Terra del Fuego, and in South America. They walk usually almost erect on two legs, and in that attitude measure about four feet in height. They are dark, wrinkled and hairy. They construct no habitation, form no families, scarcely associate to gether, sleep in caves or trees, feed on snakes and vermin, or ants' eggs, on mice and on each other. They cannot be tamed or forced to any labor, and are hunted and shot among the trees like the great gorilla. Of which they are a stunted copy. When they are captured alive one finds to his surprise that their uncouth jabbering sounds like articulate language. They turn up a human face to gaze at their captor, and a female shows instincts of modesty. Are these wretches hu-

A Palpable Hit.

Dorr was an actor of some favor, not high up, but above the level-took the part sometimes of irascible fathers and ponderous villians-and the western and southern audiences liked him. He was rather jealous of his caste and was rather jealous of his caste and scuck for his rights. He found him-self at Putsburgh; advertised to play with Forrest in 'Metamora,' in the small part, as he conceived it, of the Captain of the Puritans, and didn't like it. Coming on the stage for reheareal in the morning, he was eating an apple, when the great tragedian snarled out:

'Mr. What's your name, when wo have done eating your swill, we will go on with the rehearsal.'

The 'swill' was soon finished, but the insult stuck in the throat. night the house was crowded; Forrest did his best, roared the 'Big Injun' to everybody's satisfaction. At last it came along to the part where the Puritans visit the wigwam of the gentle savage, and enjoy an interview with the charming Nohmiokee, the wife of Metamora, in the absence of her lord. He returns, and, in a rage, as he stands before the intruders, with his finger on the trigger and his eye glancing along the barrel of his gun, shouts:

'Which of you has lived long enough ?'

Of course, the Puritans are to display proper consternation, but Dorr looking down the line of his company of supes, he saw that his end man a very slim and attentuated little fel low, and, in response to the question, pointed to the little alim supe, with a gesture that the house took, and was convulsed from gallery to pit. It was some time before the play could go on intelligently.

There stood the great Metamora with his gun to his shoulder, the Cap tain of the Puritans pointing to the lit tle supe, the house boiling with its mirth. No man ever made a more successful hit in a part, but the next morning early, he left Pittsburg on a flat boat, not daring to meet Forrest on one side and the people on the other, knowing how capricions people Slure on Women.

The Elgin (Ill.) Gazette has the fol owing article, which it would be wall for thousands of young men-and old ones, too, for that matter-to commit

Of all the evils prevalent among young men, we know of none more blighting in its moral effects than to speak slightingly of the virtue of wo men. Nor is there anything in which young men are so thoroughly mistaken as the low estimate they form of the integrity of women-not of their own mothers and moters, but of others, who, they forget, are somebody else's mothers and sisters. As a rule, no person who surrenders to this debasting habit is to be intrusted with any enterprise requiring integrity of character. Plain words should be spoken on this point, for the evil is a general one, and deep rooted. If young men are sometimes thrown into the society of thoughtless or lewd women, they have no more right to measure all other women by what they see of these than they would have to estimate the character of honest and respectable citizens by the developments of crime in police courté. Let our young men remember that their chief happiness of life de pends upon their utter faith in women. No wordly wisdom, no missnithropic philosophy, no generalization, can covr or weaken this fundamental It stands like the record of God itself -for it is nothing less than this-and should put an everlasting real upon lips that are wont to speak slightingly of women.

Mr. Ferris married in early manhood a grim old lady, twice his age. As years went by, his ancient dame As years went by, his ancient dame grew wrinkled and savage, and Mr. Ferris mourned the hour he first a wooing went. At last he met a pretty, jolly little widow down town. Both found in the other a mutual affinity, and they loved foodly averagement. and then loved fondly, extravagantly, incessantly. At last whispers of the way things were going on began to reach the old matron's ears. Although too old to love, her heart burned fiercely with the pangs of jealousy. She employed spies and detectives, and watched herself. Finally she burst in upon them, and a free fight ensued. Arraigned before the magnetrate, the vite made an attempt to explain thd difficulty.

'But,' said the recorder, you intrude on them.' 'Yes,' interposed Mr. Ferris, 'she burst with loud screams and Indianlike yell into our presence. She's Crazy

'What!' screamed the virago, 'do you call me, your wife, crazy?'
'There, now!' exclaimed Mr. Ferris with an air of triumph, 'I told you she was crazy. She thinks I'm her husband !

Mr. Ferris was too confounded to

'She's your mother, ain't she? 'Certainly,' replied the hard hearted Ferris; and before anything further could be said, the court dismissed the case.
