

VALLANDIGHAM.

His dying moments--He retains consciousness to the last--His wife not present.

CINCINNATI, June 17.—There has been much sorrow manifested here to-day concerning the tragic end of Mr. Vallandigham, and it has been by no means confined to his political friends. Persons who have differed with him and unadvisedly severely upon his course, have expressed no less regret at the terrible calamity that has befallen him than have his political associates. It appears that when the pistol was discharged, Mr. Vallandigham was hardly aware of the severe nature of the wound, as he walked around the room awhile after lying down. Governor McBurney, alarmed at the sudden appearance of a tragedy, rushed to adjoining rooms and at once summoned aid. As soon as the persons came Vallandigham said it was a foolish act, and later adverted to it as the most reckless act of his life. Though he seemed to be conscious that he was badly hurt, he appeared decidedly hopeful during the early hours. Rev. Mr. Heigh called to see him, and Vallandigham, taking him by the hand, said substantially, he had to much faith in Calvinistic doctrine to believe he would not get safely through this misfortune. Once he told the surgeon to take care of the pain and he would manage the rest. When impressed with the approach of dissolution he was calm and met the news of his condition bravely. After Dr. Reeve arrived from Dayton, he soon had the room cleared, and when no one was present intimated to Mr. Vallandigham the very serious nature of his wound. The patient, seeking for something on which to build hope, reminded the Doctor of two bad cases of injuries not fatal known to both, and asked if this was worse than they, to which the reluctant reply was possibly no. The doctor then told Mr. V. who was suffering from pain, that they would have to administer medicines of a sedative nature, and suggested that if he had any thing to say, he had better communicate it to them. He then conversed with the Doctor concerning private matters, giving directions in regard to his business, after which medicine to relieve the pain was injected by the hypodermic process. After this, there was no time when he was not under the influence of opiates that affected somewhat his sensibilities. He nevertheless appeared to keep possession of his faculties to the last. At 3:30 o'clock he seemed to be dying, and his friends were called to his bedside. From that time he rapidly sank. The pulsation at the wrist appeared to have ceased, though he was remarkably calm, so much so that Dr. Drake said he was the coolest man under such circumstances he had ever seen. He still showed occasional signs about the face of agony. As death approached, his face wore an ashy pallor. His last words were a request for medicine to allay his pain. In his last moments there were signs about his face that indicated great physical suffering, and eighteen minutes before ten this morning he was dead. There were present in the room when he died his son Charles, seventeen years old, his only living child, with whom he had a touching interview on his arrival. During the night and morning he was visited by the veteran Judge Smith, of Lebanon, General Ward, Judge Haynes, and many others. Governor McBurney was constantly contributing in every way to the dying man. The niece of Mr. V., a young girl who resided with him, arrived from Dayton after his death and was greatly grieved. The body was immediately placed in ice, preparatory to removal. From this time until the departure of the remains, the hotel was besieged with persons who came to see the face which was left exposed. The features and expression were admirably preserved. The remains left Lebanon for Dayton at two o'clock in the afternoon in charge of Judge Haynes, Mr. V.'s law partner, and Judge McKinney, of Dayton. The sad affair of the case was the absence of Mrs. V., who had gone the same evening to Cumberland, called thence by the death of her brother, Judge McMahon. She was telegraphed and will reach Dayton to-morrow morning at ten o'clock. The sad event cast a general gloom over Lebanon. Mr. V., during the trial, had made numerous friends, and had by his deportment beaten down many prejudices. All were looking forward to his speech in the defence of McGehan, which would have been delivered to-day. Mr. V. doubtless had made unusual preparations. He intended the effort to be his great criminal one at the bar. He appeared to have thoroughly worked up the case. He entered into it with characteristic energy and enthusiasm, and fell while he was endeavoring to still the more satisfactory explain its mysteries. From detailed accounts, published in the papers this morning, it appears Mr. Vallandigham, with his associate counsel, had been out Friday evening making experiments with a view to ascertain how near the muzzle of a pistol could be held to cloth without burning it. They had made the last, and were returning. Two balls had been fired from the pistol with which Mr. Vallandigham had afterwards killed himself, and Mr. Milliken, on the way to the hotel, urged him to discharge the remaining three balls. Mr. Vallandigham said: 'No, never mind,' and though Mr. Milliken repeated the suggestion, Vallandigham declined to discharge them, and took the pistol upstairs, where he had laid it beside the empty one, which he intended to make use of in the arrangement on Saturday. This led to the tragedy which soon thereafter followed. Vallandigham, instead of taking up the unloaded pistol, took the one his friend had urged him to discharge.

Greeley on Carpet-Baggers.

At the Greeley reception in New York, on the 12th inst., the philosopher, in giving an account of his southern trip, handles the carpet baggers without mitens. Among other things, he said: "The thieving carpet-baggers are for the most part fellows who went down South in the track of our armies, usually at safe distance from danger, some of them on outlers' wagons, some of them with cotton permits in their pockets, and hoping that something might turn up for them, they remained in the south. They mixed themselves up with the blacks, and promised to be the champions of their rights. Some of them got elected to the State Senates, and some to the Assembly, and some are Judges and magistrates. There they stand, right in the people's eyes, stealing and plundering many of them with their arms around the negroes' necks and their hands in their pockets, seeing if they couldn't steal something.—[Laughter.] They are the thieving carpet baggers and very pious gentlemen at that. Some of these thieves affect to be honest men. Men who go about with long faces, and with their eyes rolled up and with their hands clasped over their stomachs—[great laughter]—and profess to be greatly concerned for the salvation of their souls. Here Mr. Greeley imitated the hypocritical carpet bagger, clasping his hand over his abdomen, rolling up his eyes, and whining out with nasal twang, "Let us pray." [Great laughter and cheers.] Yes, said Mr. Greeley, these men are heavy on praying but they spell pray with an E and in that sense they fill the apostolical injunction to pray without ceasing.

INAUGURATION OF GOV. WESTON.—GALA DAY FOR THE DEMOCRACY.—CONCORD, June 14.—The gala day of the New Hampshire democracy commenced auspiciously. A salute of thirty-four rounds was fired, which aroused democracy and everybody else. The enthusiasm was unprecedented. The country people poured into the town from all quarters, and up to eleven o'clock nearly ninety car loads had arrived. The idea of barbecuing one of Frank Jones' fat oxen was abandoned, though the ox is the largest in the state—a pair of them weighing 5,500 pounds. They were freely offered by the generous 'Gambinus' of Portsmouth. The special train of twenty-five cars over the Concord road arrived at eleven o'clock this morning, in charge of General Donahoe, bringing the governor elect, the Amoskeag veterans, General Head commander, the Head Guards, and a volunteer military organization of Manchester, and a large number of others. The arrival was greeted by a salute of guns. Governor Weston was received at the depot by Gov. Stearns and other distinguished persons. The legislature having met, took a recess and proceeded in a body to the depot, where a procession formed and escorted the governor elect to the capitol. Governor Stearns then delivered his valedictory address, after which Governor Weston was inaugurated and read his message.

It is really amusing to read the effusive tariff disquisitions of Pennsylvania Radicals editors and compare them with the free trade arguments of such prominent members of their party as William Cullen Bryant, editor of the New York Evening Post. The truth of the matter is that the prominent free trade advocates stand high in the Radical party. It was these men who carried, by more than two thirds majority, the bill repealing the duty on coal and salt, passed by the lower House of Congress last winter. Judge Peters, a Maine Radical, was the author and champion of this great free trade movement. So far our Radical contemporaries have taken exceeding good care to say nothing about the singular manner in which their political associates have manifested their devotion to high tariff principles. Seriously, so long as Radicals say one thing and do another, voters will feel indisposed to trust them.

SPELL PRESIDENT.—An honorable, grave Senator, during the late recess, paid a visit to his married daughter. A bright-eyed little grandson, seven years old, anxious to parade his spelling before his distinguished grandfather, asked him for a lesson. The following was the result. Senator—Spell President. Boy—P-r-e, pre, s-i, s, i, e-n-t, dent—President. Definition—A man who takes presents. Senator—What? What's that? Boy—Well, isn't Gen. Grant President, and does he not take presents? Senator, (to his son in law)—Really, sir, I cannot see the use of instructing children seven years old in politics. Son-in-law—Why, sir, they pick these things up somehow or other. Children and fools, you know, often tell the truth. Senator (laughing)—Egad, it isn't a bad definition though of the Presidency of 1869 and 1870.—N. Y. World.

The Democratic Senate saved the people of the State $250,000 by insisting that the question whether or not a constitutional convention shall be called, should be submitted to the people at the next general election. The Republicans wanted to have a special election held immediately to determine the question, which would have entailed an expense of at least the above sum upon the taxpayers of the State. The Democratic proposition was finally adopted, and now the people can vote on the question at the same time that they vote for State and County officers.

According to a late decision of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, a person furnishing supplies for a new building cannot secure himself or obtain a lien on the building unless he first has a distinct understanding with the builder and owner of the premises. Otherwise he cannot collect one cent for whatever he may furnish for structure. It will be well for our material men and mechanics to make a note of the above, and govern themselves accordingly.
