

An Insult to Deity.
Some divines do not shrink from assuming the awful responsibility of interpreting God's great purposes in every unusual occurrence of a calamity. It is a bold and presumptuous attempt to translate the blind multitude as overwhelming them—the innocent and guilty alike—in angry slaughter and ruin, on account of unparadisaic sin, as recognized and defined by the self-constituted determiners thereof. This class of hell destined wretches, whose workings, with the humble eye of charity, can discern naught but the unfortunate and innocent victims of a kind of accident from which crowded communities of all religions and races have heretofore, at different times, suffered to a ruinous extent.—They ostentatiously parade the great, liberal, civilized and progressive city, whose prosperity went up suddenly to the heavens in flame and smoke, as like unto Sodom and Gomorrah, and for a like reason destroyed; and her people, who are neither better nor worse than those of other large commercial centres, as a lot of lust and un-stained wretches, to be scourged of Heaven, and stripped, burned and starved in the face by the winds, as a special warning, on account of pre-eminence in devilish attributes. The sight of overwhelming humanity seems to affect these divines with an unutterable, and venereal disproportionate, fickle insensate or fatal, much as does opium, the brain of its confined slave, bringing the mad and incongruous visions of the damned, and swallowing up all joy, hope and peace, in blackest night notes of the soul.

Mutilum in Parvo.
The sisters of Mercy of Omaha sent $50,000 to the relief of Chicago.
Henry Ward Beecher says "God bless the theatres," for their benevolence to Chicago.
At the Chicago relief meeting in Detroit, a little ragged dirty boy gave ten cents. It was "all he had."
Napoleon has returned to Chiselhurst. He tells an interviewer that the present Government of France is weak and inadequate to the wants of the country.
Richard E. Bowerman and Thos. J. Wilson, the defaulting ex-deputy collectors of Baltimore, have been sentenced to pay heavy fines, and the former to four, the latter to three years imprisonment.

INCORPORATIONS.
Notice is hereby given that application for the following charter of incorporation have been filed in the Court of Common Pleas of Centre county, to November term of court, to wit: Logan's, No. 1, of Bellefonte, Messiah Church, of Snow-Shoe, and will be confirmed at said term unless sufficient reasons to the contrary are shown on or before the first day of October next.
