Turtle Hunts.

The Way Turtles are Captured on Southern Beaches.

Turtle hunting and hunting turtle eggs on the beach is a favorite moonlight pastime with marooning parties, and as profitable sometimes as it is pleasant, for turtles command a ready sale in the Northern markets, and during the season are shipped largely by the steam-ship lines to New York and other Northern cities. The eggs are an epicurean dish, and much sought after.

In addition the hunters had 150 Two of the turtles were sent to Thunderbolt; one was butchered on the island, and the other was brought to this city and taken to Mr. Buntz, residence on York street, where, to gratify the curious, he will keep it to-day and tomorrow. Its flappers were securely bound with ropes. On the way over from Warsaw to the south end of Tybee Island it required five men to carry it from the landing and put it on board the

> The turtles lav three nests of eggs in a season, depositing the eggs in the sand, carefully covering them up, and skillfully trying to hide all traces of the crawl, when they leave the nest. The turtles come out by daylight and moon-light when the tide is about three fourths ebb, and scoop out the nest just above high water mark. The eggs, which are the size of a hen's egg, are hatched by the heat of the sun and sand in fifteer days, when the young turtles scratch their way through the sand and make for the sea. No matter which direction the little turtle is turned, if it is not in the direction of the beach it faces about

Col. R. D. Walker tells of a turtle hunt last season where his party, having caught all they wanted one night, found a very large turtle, and two men steadied the Colonel on its back, and he rode in triumph to the water's edge, where he jumped off and gave the turtle its

Ben. Butterworth's Discomfiture.

The Hon. Benjamin Butterworth is very good in memory of names and faces and an excellent actor when he fails to recall either. He generally gets along all right, but the other day he caught a Tartar.

A fine looking gentleman rushed up to him and, grasping his hand, exclaimed with much warmth. "Major Butterworth I am glad to see you. How are you, how are you, major?

Now, when you can't remember a man and can't speak his name, and he is so familiar and friendly that you don't want him to notice your ignorance, it is want him to notice your ignorance, it is of refined sugar in competition with the customary to endeavor to cover the failure to speak the name with a profusion of greetings.

If you know him you will call him by name as you "shake" and say "How are Otherwise you will do as Butterworth did. He said: "Why, hello; how are you? Howd'y do? Howd'y do? How are you? Well, I declare! Howd'y do? When did you come on!'

"I came on yesterday," said the gentleman, seeming to appreciate the hearty greeting of the handsome Ohioan. 'How'd you leave the boys in Ohio?'

asked the major.
"Ohio?" said the gentleman doubtful-"I never was in Ohio."

"Of course," replied the flurried congressman. "My head is so full of Ohio and Ohio matter just now that I spoke the word inadvertantly. Well, anything new? How's your family?"
"My family! I havn't got any family," said the stranger.

"No, of course not. I didn't mean that," said the major, shifting about as though the floor was getting hot and be-ginning to look desperate. "But how are all the boys at your place, anyhow?"

"I don't think you know anybody in my town. I live at Lynn," said the stranger, looking at the statesman sus-

"Oh, certainly, of course. Oh, yes, I know some boys in Lynn," feebly murmurred the major. "I saw you when you came up to address the Home Market, of Boston," said the stranger. At last a cue was given, and a look of joyful relief, recollection and recognition came over the major's face like a sunburst. "Why, of course, I knew you at once; and am mighty glad to meet you again. I never forget a face. I couldn't think for a moment where I saw you last." "I don't think you ever saw me before. I was in Tremont Temple when you spoke, and was in a rear seat. I am sure you could not have seen me, and that was the only time I ever saw you." was wiping his perspiring forehead, and remarking to friends who had been con-vulsed by his experience:

"By jimminy! I'll never get into such a toil as that again. When a stranger comes up to me hereafter I will say, "I don't know you. Who are you? What's your name, age, height, weight, and place of business? Have you been vaccinated? Have you had the mumps, and, if so, how many? I will let him understand thoroughly that I don't know him.'

He Kicked Three Times.

"Yes, we meet with all sorts of people ere," answered the railroad conductor, as he sat down in the smoker after making his rounds. "It is a great place in which to study human nature." "Aren't there a good many kickers

"I'll go you a box of cigars."
"Done, old fellow!" They were shaking hands on it when the man rose up and went to the water-cooler. He took two or three sips of water and then walked back to the conductor and said

THE SUGAR SITUATION BRIEFLY STATED.—The sugar situation stands about in this way: There are duties on both raw and refined sugars. The duty on raw sugar has an element of protection in it, but is, in effect, a revenue duty, yielding over $55,000,000 to the on refined sugar is protective almost to the prohibitory point. It yields only about $1,500,000 to the Treasury. Reof life to every one of the 65,000,000 of consumers in this country. The people consume about 3,000,000,000 po of sugar annually, and the tariff duty enables the Trust to extort at least $30,-000,000 a year from them. The way to break the Trust is to repeal the duty on refined sugar, or cut it down to such a point as will admit of the importation hadn't gone over two blocks farther

Anecdote of Napoleon.

After having gained the battle o Wagram the Emperor Napoleon estab lished his head-quarters for a time at Schoenbrun, and there occupied himself, pending the negotations for his Austrian alliance, with reviewing his troops and distributing among them rewards and honors. One old and brave regiment of the line was drawn out before him for this purpose, his custom being to examine every corps individually, under the guidance of the officers. After having formed the regiments into columns, Napolean entered among the ranks and bestowed praises and decorations on all who appeared worthy of them. Five hours he spent in this occupation, and at length, when he had satisfied himself that no one maa's claims had been overlooked, he finished by saying aloud to the colonel: "Now present to me the bravest soldier in your whole regiment." In some cases this might have been a difficult matter; it did not appear so Five minutes afterwards the major now. The colonel, indeed, hesitated a moment, but the question was caught by the soldiers, and one universal answer came from the ranks, "Morio! Corporal Morio !" was the cry. The colonel approved of the decision, and Morio was called forward. He was a man still young, but embrowned by service, and he already wore on his person three badges of merit, and the cross of the legion of honor. Napoleon looked at him attentively. "Ah," said he, "you have seen service?" "Fifteen years, my emperor," replied Morio, "sixteen campaigns and ten wounds, not to speak of contusions." "How many great battles?" asked the emper-
