Through travelers on the railroad will find this an excellent place to lunch or procure a meal, as all trains stop there about 25 minutes. 24 24

THE CUMMINGS HOUSE, BELLEFONTE, PA. Having assumed the proprietorship of this finely located and well known hotel, I desire to inform the public that while it will have no bar, and be run strictly as a temperance hotel, it will furnish to its patrons all the comforts, conveniences and hospitalities offered by others. Its table will not be surpassed by any. Its rooms are large and comfortable. Its stabling is the best in town, and its prices to transient guests and regular boarders will be very reasonable. The citizens of the town will find in the basement of my hotel a FIRST-CLASS MEAT MARKET at which all kinds of Meat can be purchased at the very lowest rates. Masculine Superiority.

The compassion or the scorn with which the masculine mind regards the female of the race begins so early in life it is most difficult to say whether it is the result of intuition or is one of the gifts of intuition. The small boy feels himself superior to his little sister quite without regard to whether he or she is the more clever. He is he and she is only she.

A small 5-year-old lad, in whose this sense of masculine superiority was not wholly lacking, was one day arrayed in his first trousers. Standing before his sister, a couple of years younger, he drew himself up for inspection, and then proceeded to address her to this effect: "Kittie," he said, "you can't never wear trousers."

He paused again and let this dreadful announcement in its turn eat into his sister's soul; then he brought out the climax with a triumphant thrill in his voice more eloquent than any words could have been: "Kittie, you can't never be a man now!"

Poor, small Kittie, overwhelmed by these successive statements, of which she comprehended the import only as something unpeppably dreadful, and took that from the tone, probably, rather than from the words, looked at her brother on agonized moment and then gave vent to her anguish in one wild howl which brought nurse from one direction and mamma from another. At sight of the audience Kittie burst into tears and lamentations piteous to behold, and when the small boy was reproved for making his sister cry, his answer was: "Well, I just told her she'd always go to be a girl, 'cause I thought she'd be disappointed if she got to be five and couldn't have on trousers."

Which seemed to be nothing in particular which could be said to this, and the elders devoted themselves to assuaging the grief of the small girl as well as they might, leaving the boy to strut about in his new trousers in the full consciousness of having done his duty to the weaker vessel.—Boston Courier.

Fauntleroy and the Cigarettes.

"My child," said old Lord Fauntleroy to little Lord Fauntleroy, as the latter dragged himself in, looking very pale and weak and wan, "it grieves me deeply that you have formed the pernicious habit of smoking cigarettes."

"I haven't grandpa; truly, I haven't."

"Then why do you carry them in your pocket?" asked the aged man, as he inserted two fingers into one pocket of his little lordship's trousers and drew forth a whole package.

"Oh, grandpa, I never knew they were there! That little Jimmie Jones must have put them in my pocket to disgrace me."

"Yes. Then how is it that your lips and fingers are stained brown?"

"I've been eating licorice, grandpa."

"Indeed? Then how comes it that your breath smells of tobacco?"

"That had little Jimmie Jones blew a whole lot of smoke in my face to make me sick."

"You don't tell me? Then how do you explain the fact that I saw you down around the corner just a little while ago with a cigarette in your mouth?"

"Oh, that was because I wanted to show that had little Jimmie Jones how nasty they are in their mouths. I have been trying to reform Jimmie, but he won't let me. He hates me because I got a merit card in Sunday school and he didn't."

"My angel child, I am glad that I was mistaken when I thought you had formed a filthy, pernicious habit. Don't have anything more to do with that wicked Jones boy. He will contaminate you."—Albany Express.

Love and Friendship.

Some propose to discountenance all gossip of whatever kind, as a bar to slander. But this is unnecessary. To set a saw is not necessarily to file its teeth all down, and to have conversation harmless it is unnecessary to confine it to impersonal matters, or to reduce the treatment of every personal question to the dead commonplace level. There should be a generous latitude accorded to all general conversation. One's absent friends and neighbors may be spoken of as though by some miraculous power they could hear all remarks. We would soon dislike our dearest friends were we to speak evil of them—for a hatred of those we have injured ever creeps into the heart. There is too little human love in the world, should be assiduously cultivated. How friendship is exalted in poetry and romance! How our hearts thrill with admiration when we read in history of the illustrious few that have been willing to sacrifice even life itself upon the altar of friendship!

Strive then to win friends, and in all intercourse with them appeal only to their nobler natures, and never listen to evil reports concerning them, thereby proving that your friendship is worthy of the name.—Fannie L. Tancher in Ladies' Home Journal.

—There is a story of a wealthy merchant who, on his dying bed, called his son David to him and, wishing to make provision for his boy, addressed him thus: "David."

"Yes, papa."

"You've always been a good boy and I'll remember you. I am dying now."

"Yes, papa."

"David, you know the $10,000 I've got out at 10 per cent?"

"Yes, papa."

"I'll let you have it for 8."

David faints while the spirit of the good man slipped from its mortal frame.

The Prairie-Dog.

Something About the Little Dweller of the Western Plains.

Maj. Denten, who is spending his retirement in Atlanta, says the Constitution of that place, was one of the bravest frontier officers and led part of the Custer expedition which ended so fatally. He is a great observer of natural history, and his narrative of stories about animals is quite as brilliant as are his recitals of army incidents. "Not a blade of grass will grow," said he, "where a prairie-dog takes up his abode."

The prairie-dog lives in burrows. The burrows run down to a depth of five or six feet, then they turn upward, running near the surface of the ground for several feet. The reason they make this turn in the burrows is to prevent water from drowning them out, and to take more precaution they work the dirt up around the mouth of their burrows to the height of a foot, some times more. There are a great many mistakes concerning the habits of these ingenious little animals. Some claim that if one is shot near his burrow he will crawl back into his burrow before he dies, but that is all a mistake. I have shot them while they would be in the mouth of their burrow and then take them out. Some think that a prairie-dog enters his burrow at the coming of winter and remains there until spring calls him forth, but that is another mistake. I have seen them walking in the snow hunting for something to eat. They live on grasses and roots and prickly pear, or cactus, as it is called by some.

The prairie-dog is about the size of a fox squirrel and almost the color of one. They are very destructive to crops. The farmers poison thousands of them, but it seems as if the old adage of killing one fly ten will take its place has reference to the prairie-dog. Another tale is told of the prairie-dog—that the rattlesnake, the prairie owl, and the prairie-dog all live in the same burrow, but that is the greatest mistake of all. The owl and the rattlesnake do not live in the towns, or rather the rattlesnake dies in the prairie-dog town, for no sooner does he enter a burrow than the dogs collect and commence filling up the burrow, and if the rattlesnake goes in for a few days, then his doom is sealed, but if he is near the mouth of the burrow he will come out as soon as possible. When the owl takes up his abode in a burrow the dog leaves it and goes to another burrow. They never try to fill up a burrow when an owl goes in, probably because they think there is not as much harm in an owl as there is in a rattlesnake."

NICE WAYS OF COOKING TOMATOES.

Fried or broiled tomatoes are good for breakfast or supper. Select round, medium sized tomatoes, and after washing them in cold water and drying, cut them half an inch thick, dip them in flour seasoned with salt and pepper, and then in melted butter, place on double broiler and brown quickly and delicately on both sides. Fried tomatoes prepared as for broiling, season with salt and pepper, dip them in beaten egg diluted with a little boiling water, and then in powdered bread crumbs. They are then placed in a frying pan containing plenty of hot fat, browned on each side and served.

Scalloped tomatoes for which either the fresh or the canned fruit may be used, are made by placing alternate layers of bread crumbs and tomatoes in a pudding dish and seasoning with salt, pepper and some bits of butter between each layer. They should be baked twenty minutes, and may be finished by scattering a layer of cheese over the top layer of crumbs. A similar dish is made by using layers of boiled rice instead of bread crumbs and seasoning with salt, pepper and curry powder. A brown or white sauce is often served with broiled or fried tomatoes.

Select firm, ripe tomatoes that are smooth and of good size. From the top of the stem part cut a thin slice and remove most of the seeds, being careful not to break the sides. Prepare a dressing from bread crumbs, salt, cayenne pepper, chopped onion, and clarified butter, in the proportion of two cups of crumbs, a teaspoonful of salt, a dash of red pepper, two teaspoonfuls of onion chopped very fine and two teaspoonfuls of melted butter; fill the tomatoes full of the dressing and bake in a pudding dish twenty-five minutes. Nutmeg, marjoram or parsley may be used instead of onion to season the stuffing, and the quantity given will fill one dozen tomatoes.

News-paper Advertising Pays.

Why It is Better than Board Signs and Street Dodgers.

A Successful Merchant in Men's Outfitters. Nothing is so profitable as advertising. If spending $100 a year in advertising will cause an increase net profit of $200 it is a safe investment. My own experience in this ratio is much larger. I have tested the matter in every way. I began by not advertising at all, and I confess that it was through your example which led me to do so. Then I tried sign boards on the country roads. They brought in some out-town folks who did not know me before, but did not influence the townspeople. I tried handbills but the distribution was not good unless I sent my own clerks out with them, and that was too expensive. Found that though the handbills were cheap enough, the cost of the boys' time and the bills together exceeded that of an equal space and distribution by the newspapers. Then I don't know how the matter got up and distributing bills, and so what interest they did excite was spasmodic and temporary, while the newspaper presented a constant. Not only that, but I became convinced that the newspaper advertisement was more influential than the street flyer. It lent somewhat of its own dignity and respectability to whatever was said in its columns.

The Characteristics of a Forgotten Statesman.

From the Chicago Daily News. The appalling intelligence comes from Ohio that Gen. Warren J. Keifer is again trying to break into Congress. Aside from the gentleman's marvellous incompetency, the chief thing noteworthy about him is his propensity to "dash his star," so to speak. If there be any free rides to be had by reason of his being an M. C., Keifer is after them and never tires till he runs them down as one would run down a fat pullet for dinner when company comes. He is worse than a country editor for dead-end enterprises. His pockets were once full of money, and he asks all his wife's second cousins on junkets to Yellowstone Park whenever he is in Congress. As a private man he is a marked success, as a congressman—a man might go out on the street and have a reputation and a better legislative timber than Keifer.

Nomadic.

A gentleman riding on horseback over the western prairies, met a dilapidated "prairie schooner" drawn by a pair of bony and hollow-eyed oxen. A ragged, uncouth man and a woman of equally unattractive appearance, with a fretful and untidily baby in her arms, occupied the front seat, while the rear part of the wagon did not seem to contain anything but other ragged children of all ages and sizes.

The man brought the oxen to a standstill and thus accosted the traveler: "Got any terbacker, mister?"

"No, I never use it."

"You don't? Well I wonder how in creation a feller kin get along 'thout terbacker. Are you travellin' or jist goin' somebwar?"

The traveler, not unwilling to have a little conversation with this queer specimen of humanity, had reined up his horse and said: "I am going to the next town. Where are you bound?"

"Well, I don't zactly know jist where we will settle down. Where'd you come from?"

"From Kansas."

"How's times out there?"

"Very good."

"Any chance for a feller to make a living?"

"Oh, yes, plenty of chances."

"What at?" asked the man, eagerly.

"At hard work."

This evidently dampened the man's ardor.

"Some kin stand hard work," he said, "and some can't. I don't believe in a feller makin' a slave of himself. That's why I left loway and Ohio and Illinoi."

"What do you want to do for a living?"

"Well, I don't zactly know."

"And you've no idea where you will locate?"

"No, dunno as I hev; but I'm willing to stop in any place where times is good, and I kin git along."

He is probably wandering still, he and his family, adding to that great and widely scattered army of people who never "git along" in any country.—Youth's Companion.

Friday in the Year 1889.

Those who cherish the "unlucky Friday" superstition must regard the present year with particular distrust. It came in and will go out on Friday; there are four months in it having five Friday days; the longest and shortest of its days are on Friday, and its entire number of Fridays is fifty-three. A man will be kept busy to dodge all of these ill-omened conditions.

And to cap the climax it might be added that Johnston was destroyed by water on Friday, May 31, 1889.

Decided to Eat Each Other.

AUCKLAND, September 16.—The Tonga steamer Wainui brought to this port the captain and crew of the British ship Garston, Captain Davies, from Sidney, N. S. W., for San Francisco, which foundered in midocean. The shipwrecked sailors were 22 days in an open boat without food or water. On the twenty-second day the men, driven to desperation by hunger and thirst, decided that one of the number be sacrificed to save the lives of the others. They were casting lots to see who should be the victim, when they sighted Wallis Land. The natives of the island assisted the exhausted men to land, and treated them in the kindest manner. A mission boat took them to Tonga.

BLOOD POISON

Causes much suffering and is very difficult to cure. But by its great purifying powers Hood's Sarsaparilla has accomplished many remarkable cures in severe cases, one of which is described below: I bought and paid for all I used. This testimonial I give for the benefit of those afflicted with any disease of the blood.

"Four years ago on a warm day I handled a lot of boards covered by poison ivy. I soon had all the symptoms of blood poisoning, and it spread all over me till I was scab from head to feet, suffering INTENSE HEAT AND ITCHING. My skin peeled everywhere, my hair and whiskers came out, my finger nails came off; I had three different physicians, who succeeded in drying it up at times, only to have it break out again when I got a little warmed up from exercise. I was finally obliged to give up work, and after two years I have been entirely free of symptom of the poisoning. I can recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all as the best blood purifier I know of." Geo. W. VESSE, 70 Park Avenue, Brookport, N. Y.

NEW SKIN WAS SOFT AND MOIST. Then I bought six bottles for five dollars; took three bottles and was apparently well. But the next summer in warm weather, when I got my blood warmed up, the poisoning would come out again in spots and barn and itch. Then I took the two other bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and after two years I have been entirely free of symptom of the poisoning. I can recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all as the best blood purifier I know of." Geo. W. VESSE, 70 Park Avenue, Brookport, N. Y.
