CENTRAL HOTEL,

MILESBURG, PA. A. A. KOHLBECKER, Proprietor. This new and commodious Hotel, located opposite the depot, Milesburg, Centre county, has been entirely refurnished and repainted throughout, and is now second to none in the county in the character of accommodations offered the public. Its table is supplied with the best of the market affords, its bar contains the purest and choicest liquors, its stable has attentive hostlers, and every convenience and comfort is extended to its guests. Through travelers on the railroad will find this an excellent place to lunch or procure a meal, as all trains stop there about 25 minutes. 24 24

THE CUMMINGS HOUSE

BELLEFONTE, PA. Having assumed the proprietorship of this finely located and well known hotel, I desire to inform the public that whilist it will have no bar, and be run strictly as a temperance hotel, it will furnish to its patrons all the comforts, conveniences and hospitalities offered by others. Its table will not be surpassed by any. Its rooms are large and comfortable. Its stabling is the best in town, and its prices to transient guests and regular boarders will be very reasonable. The citizens of the town will find in the basement of my hotel a FIRST-CLASS MEAT MARKET at which all kinds of Meat can be purchased at the very lowest rates. I earnestly solicit a share of the public patronage. GOTLEIB HAAG, 33 13

Medical.

MARCH 31—APRIL 30—MAY 31

Are the best months in which to purify your blood. During the long, cold winter, the blood becomes thin and impure, the body becomes weak and tired, the appetite may be lost, and just now the system craves the aid of a reliable medicine. Hood's Sarsaparilla is peculiarly adapted to purify and enrich the blood, to create a good appetite and to overcome that tired feeling. It increases in popularity every year, for it is the ideal spring medicine.

HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA

"Every spring for years I have made it a practice to take from three to five bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla, because I know it purifies the blood and thoroughly cleanses the system of all impurities. That languid feeling, sometimes called 'spring fever,' will never visit the system that has been properly cared for by this never-failing remedy." W. H. LAWRENCE, Editor Agricultural Epitomist, Indianapolis, Ind.

THE BEST SPRING MEDICINE

"I have taken three bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla and consider it the best blood medicine I have ever taken. It builds me up, makes me sleep better, gives me a good appetite and improves my health generally." MRS. A. F. LAWRENCE, Portland, Me.

Hunting the Alligator.

A Hazardous Calling Pursued by the Florida Nimrods.

The great demand which has recently sprung up for crocodile and alligator skins has produced a very unique class of Nimrods in Florida, who are locally known as professional alligator hunters. These make a special business of slaying the saurians at all seasons for their hides and teeth, but vary it occasionally by trapping others or slaughtering plume birds for dealers in feathered millinery.

The hunters are chiefly natives of Florida, as they know every reptilian haunt for miles around their ramshackle cottages and are as much at home in deadly malarial swamps as mountainteers are in their lively, sky-kissing peaks and table lands.

These swamp rangers are usually tall, thin, and almost as sallow as saffron, but polite, unpretentious and hospitable. They traverse the ponds, lakes and streams of the wilderness fearlessly, and generally hunt in couples, though three or more may be found in a party, the number depending somewhat on the abundance of victims. A daring self-reliant individual may sometimes be found working alone, and if he has any thing like luck, and knows good hunting grounds, he often earns a handsome sum in a short time and, under the worst of circumstances, makes what he calls "day wages," if he is able to use a gun.

His outfit usually consists of a light boat, about fifteen feet in length and two in width, a jack lamp, pushing pole, pair of oars, large hook attached to a long handle, small tent, axe or hatchet, sharp hunting knife, pocket knife, cooking utensils, gun and ammunition, stock of provisions and a few knick-knacks for general purposes. The lamp has a bull's eye globe about three inches in diameter and is generally tied around the hat during a night hunt. The paddle is four or five feet long, with a broad blade to take a firm hold of the water. The implement known as the "gator pole" is made of yellow pine, and about ten feet long, with a large hook forged out of quarter inch iron at the end. This hook has a shank two inches in length, so that it is large enough to hold the largest saurian in the South. It is chiefly used for raising dead alligators from the muddy retreats and pulling them in over the bow of the boat.

The tent is used as a residence and for storing hides in when they are salted, unless some broad-branched tree can be found which will do equally as well, for peltries exposed to the sun will crack and blister in a short time and become comparatively worthless. The gun carried is either a ten or twelve bore breechloader, the ordinary load for the latter being three and a half drachms of powder and twelve buckshot. This charge is gauged to kill the largest bull gator in Florida almost instantaneously if it is planted in his eyes or between them and the ear, the latter being the best position, as the balls then penetrate to the atomic brain without any hindrance from the strong skull-bones.

When two men hunt together one man poles or paddles and the second stands in the bow with gun in hand and lamp fastened to his hat and carefully scans every object within the circle of light. On discerning an alligator, he waves his hand to the steersman and motions which way to move, and as the craft proceeds, he signals in the same way to hurry, go slow, spurt or stop abruptly, according as the necessities of the case may demand.

The gun-bearer is always the more experienced hunter of the two, but when both men are equally expert they change positions at intervals during the night. They can readily tell the size of the saurian by the gleaming of its eyes, because the larger it is the more light does they emit. An adult has eyes an inch or more in diameter, and when the mellow rays of the lamp or gator oil in the lamp fall on them they act as reflectors and throw a ring of light on the black water near them.

The best time for shooting saurians is the early part of dark nights, that being their favorite feeding hour, particularly in lakes and fresh water streams. On seeing the light approaching they gaze at it in the most fawning manner, and if the hunters draw near they wave their hands to the steersman within a few feet before attempting to escape. Most of them are shot within distances varying from five to twenty yards, as the men wish to make as clean a kill as possible, to prevent the animals from escaping and alarming all others in that vicinity. Some alligators, on being hit give a few spasmodic heaves and dive to the bottom as dead as salt herrings, but others thrash the water into foam and turn a series of quick somersaults that would reflect credit on a circus acrobat.

When the saurian sinks, the boat is kept beside it by promptly sticking the pushing pole into the mud, and is retained there until the carcass is taken aboard over the bow with the hook. One of the men then chops it across the back with ax or hatchet just in front of the hind legs, and almost severs the head from the body by a second cut. This is done to prevent it from floundering about in the boat and upsetting it or charging the men. The enormous vital power of the alligator often prevents it from dying for some time after being shot. The nerves live for several hours after the head is cut off, and an alligator which is left for dead, sometimes becomes lively enough the following day to march away in search of healthier quarters. It is nothing unusual for an apparently defunct saurian to revive suddenly and charge the hunters so furiously as to drive them out of the boat or to tumble overboard itself and flee with such rapidity as to raise high waves in a most placid stream or lake.

Some alligators, on seeing a light approach, commence roaring, their vibratory bellowing often being heavy enough to jar the ground, and others alternately raise the head and tail and slowly roll forth their feelings in thund-

IMPORTANT—If you cannot read this print distinctly by lamp or gaslight in the evening, at a distance of ten inches, your eyesight is failing, no matter what your age, and your eye-need help. Your sight can be improved and preserved if properly corrected. It is a wrong idea that spectacles should be dispensed with as long as possible. If they assist the vision, there is no danger of seeing too well, so long as the print is not magnified; it should look natural size, but plain and distinct.
