A Dynamite Ship.

Uncle Sam's Little Cruiser, The Vesuvius.

Uncle Sam's latest addition to his navy, the dynamite cruiser, Vesuvius, is alone in the world, born of the era when ships as well as men must fight with armor.

There is no erring in the work of the Vesuvius, and no ship will want to meet a second discharge of 600 pounds of dynamite from any one of her guns.

Practically, this black painted, practical looking little ship is a floating gun-carriage, which is, to all intents and purposes, indestructible.

That these decks would be at all injured is, of course, highly improbable, and in the hottest fight the captain might sit and smoke his pipe and manipulate his guns and turret, safely seated in his steel fighting position.

To the rear of the guns, in the engine room, is the reservoir from which they receive the compressed air used in discharging them.

He, by using the levers at his hand, admits the requisite quantity of compressed air, indicators in front of him guiding him in his work.

The cylinders in the loading chamber contain, as a rule, sixty-six projectiles, that is, twelve to each gun, and in action they revolve and shoot the charges into the guns with the rapidity and ease of a revolving cannon.

In the engine room everything is perfection. On either side is a set of four engines which work the twin screws, and, so far as signals and levers are concerned, nothing has been omitted that modern invention can bestow.

The veteran preacher, the Rev. Dr. Cyrus A. Bartol, sends me the following handful of "Memorable expressions": "None can be more so," says he, "than Washington's, so well quoted by Mr. Curtis: 'The event is in the hand of God.'"

Expressive Sayings. The veteran preacher, the Rev. Dr. Cyrus A. Bartol, sends me the following handful of "Memorable expressions": "None can be more so," says he, "than Washington's, so well quoted by Mr. Curtis: 'The event is in the hand of God.'"

Fed With Live Rabbits. A big crowd stood in front of James Burns' animal depot yesterday and gazed in through the open door where in the rear of the store was visible a big glass box, in which writhed and twisted the largest of the constrictors ever brought to this country.

It's almost time for the rabbits to arrive from Brooklyn," said James Burns, the son of the proprietor, "and when they get here I'll show you a sight worth seeing. Those three snakes are big ones, and measure 14, 18, and 28 feet in length, respectively. The biggest one is over thirty inches in circumference.

Two of the snakes were quiet, but the largest one was raising and lowering its scaly head against the glass and shooting out its forked tongue, as though it knew what was coming.

The other rabbits were saved for a later feast, -New York World.

ECONOMISING IN POSTAGE STAMPS.—One day last week a gentleman sent his coachman to the neighboring village for fifty cents' worth of two-cent stamps.

A GOOD RECOMMENDATION.—"Are these complexion powders warranted for fifty cents?" asked the smile widened, "I asked for fifty cents' worth of stamps, and the postmaster, says he, 'one cent or two cents?' an' I bought the one-cent stamps, sir, because I could get more of them."
