The proper way to apply manure to the land is not to spread it on a hard surface, as the rains may wash away soil either with the plow, cultivator or pulverizer, and the soluble matter will then go down instead of flow off.

Wheat and cheat are said to be distinguished from each other by the fact that cheat can he on the ground for several years and then grow, while wheat rots the first year. Cheat produces six times as much from a single seed as wheat. Cheat grows year after year without cultivation, but wheat will Cleanliness in the stable is more important than cleanliness in the dairy. Many cows are milked with the manure covering their sides, and often the udders are filthy. The udders and teats should always be washed and wiped dry with a clean towel, and the hands of the milker should also be treated in the same manner. By so doing much of the soluble filth that goes into the milk will be avoided.

W. J. Chamberlain, of Iowa, tells the readers of the Ohio Farmer that at the beginning of having he had 39 acres of timothy and clover on his little farm of 126 acres, 28 acres put in with phosphate, and about 11 with manure, 20 loads well rotted per acre. The phos-phated averaged the best, though the manured was nearer the barn and had much the most manure for forty years before this special dressing.

The amount of water that falls upon exposed manure during the winter is very large, and as it passes through the heap it carries off all matter that is soluble, leaving a large pile of material containing but little nutrition for plants but which costs just as much to haul as that which is more valuable. A cheap shed, or covering of any kind (even if only of boards laid on the heap), will save more than the cost of protecting the heap.

How to breed a dairy machine, how to feed her-these are problems. Here among these cows you see a Hereford, a cow with a lymphatic temperament, a maker of flesh. There you have a Holstein, a natural dairy cow. It is a question of heredity. You could not persuade a horseman to put a strain of a dray-horse blood into the blood of his racing horse. But the farmer tries to make butter, in many cases, out of a beef cow.

In Illinois, where the weather becomes very cold at times, farmers who have kept beets, turnips and potatoes in bins, with dry dirt or sand filled in between the spaces, report that the roots kept through the winter without difficulty, and were always accessibe. When stored in mounds outside the frost sealed them until spring, the ground being so hard that the roots could not easily be gotten out of the in Hsrat,88 Warren Street, New York. 35 19 mounds. The time to select seed corn for next year is at this season, while it is being husked. The careful selection of the best ears, that contain the most perfect seed, will add more to the future crop than anything else, as corn is easily improved by selection.
