Medical.

CAUSES OF SCROFULA.

First of all, Scrofula is inherited. The large majority of people suffer more or less from impure blood given them by their parents. Second, Scrofula may be acquired by trying to live on insufficient and poorly-cooked food, which fails to supply the blood with enough of the elements of life and health. Third, confinement in poorly ventilated rooms, workshops or factories, or living in damp, unhealthy localities, will poison the blood and develop Scrofula.

FOR ALL CASES Of scrofula, whether inherited or acquired, and in whatever form, Hood's Sarsaparilla is the most successful medicine known. It thoroughly expels every trace of impurity, gives the blood those elements of heat and vitality which it craves, and helps the liver and kidneys, the great excretors of the system, to perform their natural duties.

KING OF MEDICINES.

Is what Wm. A. Lehr of Kendallville, Ind. calls Hood's Sarsaparilla, and with good reason. Scrofula, in the form of white swellings and sores confined him to his bed for 7 years and kept him an invalid for 11 long years. His sufferings were intense, he feared he never should get well. But he read of cures by Hood's Sarsaparilla and decided to try this medicine. He was soon gratified to see the sores decrease, and to make a long story short, as the result of taking Hood's Sarsaparilla faithfully he has been entirely cured of scrofula and given good health.

A California Baroness.

Four Million Dollars Left by the Argonaut Horseshoer.

A tall, slender and not very imposing figure stalked about the Richelieu for a couple of days this week, says the Chicago Herald. The tall young man was quite dark and had an unmistakable foreign air. He rode about a good deal in the swiftest equipages that could be hired. He was accompanied by a striking-looking lady of youthful mien and strongly marked Celtic features.

The two were the Baron and Baroness von Schroeder, of San Francisco, New York and Berlin. The Baron, though a genuine article of Baron, does not look to be the wearer of such a title, while that of "Baroness" fits the Iberian face of his excellent wife about as genuine diamond fits the bosom of a negro minstrel.

Though permanent residents of this country, the Baron and Baroness hug their titles with death-like grip. Neither would for a moment lay aside the precious prefix to their names or substitute the plain American "Mr. and Mrs."

The Baron and Baroness von Schroeder are very rich—that is to say, with great accuracy, the Baroness is very rich. She is the only daughter of the late Peter Donahue, of San Francisco, who died a few years ago, leaving about four millions to his widow and a son and daughter. Baron von Schroeder appeared about that time from Germany, and though poor as a church mouse he and his title attracted the attention of the rich Miss Donahue. The Baron and Baroness divide their time about equally between New York and San Francisco. They have beautiful residences on both sides of the continent.

The other day, when the Baroness clad in a gorgeous sequin and the Baron with a fur trimmed coat and a ten-pound cane left the Richelieu to enter one of Mr. Payne's luxurious drags, an old Sacramento man, who happened to be enjoying Major Drummond's hospitality, smiled and said: "I wonder what old Peter Donahue would say if he saw that? Dear old Pete! He was the salt of the earth. He could take twenty-eight fingers a day regularly and snore the roof off his castle at night."

Peter Donahue was one of the best horse shoers in New York when he went to California in 1849. He worked at his trade up to 1893—horseshoeing and in general blacksmithing—and in 1854 he started a little foundry. Peter used to get an ounce of gold in dust ($16) for shoeing a horse and four ounces of gold for "setting" the tires of a wagon.

It was Peter Donahue's little blacksmith shop that formed the nucleus of the present magnificent Riesen Iron Works of San Francisco. Old Peter, however, made the bulk of his fortune in real estate. He bought water lots in San Francisco when they sold as low as $10 each. What is known as the Academy Building in that city, on Pine Street, which has passed from the Donahue estate into the hands of the Baroness von Schroeder, and is valued at $250,000, was built upon the ground which cost old Peter two ounces of dust or $32.

When Peter had grown rich he built a great stone vault in Calvary in an appropriate spot. With the pride that he ever felt in his antecedents, and of the wealth that had come from humble beginnings, he had set in the arch over the doorway a big medallion in stone representing the arm of Vulcan, and under it the motto: "Labor Omnia Vincit."

The old man had not been laid away many months when the Baron and Baroness von Schroeder sent a stone cutter to chisel off the arm of the Vulcan and the motto, insert in letters of gold the simple names: "Donahue Von Schroeder."

A Judge of Human Nature.

A young man who wanted to buy some pretty jewelry for his best girl, dropped into one of the John street jewelry shops the other day. He selected a handsome bracelet which cost $40. He didn't happen to have so much money with him, and told the man who waited on him to put it aside for him, and he would call for it later in the day. He noticed as he spoke that the man was eyeing him very intently. It made him feel slightly uncomfortable, and the thought flashed across his mind that the man did not believe that he would return.

"I suppose you don't like to do that sort of thing," he said, "but I will come for it surely. I will leave a deposit if you prefer."

The man smiled and shook his head. "Oh, no," he said. "I wasn't thinking of that at all. I was just going to say to you that there is no need of your coming down again. Just write out a check for the amount, and take the bracelet along with you, or, if you prefer, I will send it to your address."

He took a blank check from the drawer and handed it to the customer, together with a pen. The customer was amazed.

"Why, how do you know that my check will be good for anything?" he asked. "You never saw me before."

"I know," said the man quietly, "but that is the way we do business. We have been doing this for twenty years, and never made a mistake yet. It is part of our business to judge human nature quickly and decidedly, and it is upon our judgment we offer this convenience to certain customers. We don't do it with everybody, you may be sure."

He had made no mistake in this instance, and the customer filled out the check, and took the bracelet along.

The last venture that we read of in the use of human hair is a fan value at $250, says Harper's Bazar. Duff fingers must have fashioned this unique curiosity, for what appears to be costly lace fringing the sticks is really human hair; baby curls, like unto fairy thistle-down, we doubt not, yielding to the gentle wooing of summer's soft breezes.

Maggie's Charm.

"What is it that makes everybody love Maggie Fitch so?" said Jennie Howard half petulantly, as she turned away from the window after having seen the elegant Mrs. Dayton, with her little daughter by her side, gracefully riding her horse, take Maggie off in her handsome carriage, and dash off again down street. "She isn't pretty nor stylish. Now what is it, do you suppose?"

"I think I know the charm. Perhaps you would better set yourself the task this week to discover it," answer her mother, busily putting the sitting-room to rights.

The next day at school Jennie followed her like a detective. The first thing she noticed was Maggie's kindness to Alice Ross, a shy, new scholar, who stood quite alone, looking wistfully at the others at their gay sports. Maggie went over and made her acquaintance, merry group and was soon running like a deer and laughing with the rest.

When school was called, Maggie laid a rose on the teacher's desk as she passed, and smiled a cheery "Good-morning," and received an appreciative smile in return.

About an hour later, while busily studying, a smoother sob caught her ear. Looking about, she saw the new scholar sitting with head bent forward regarding her slate with a hopeless expression to leave her seat, which was granted, as were all like requests, for they were rare, and the teacher knew they were never of a trifling nature.

"What is the matter, Alice?" asked Maggie, sitting down beside her. "I can't do one of these examples," she replied, dashing away a tear.

Maggie took the slate, read over an example, and soon had it down correctly. With a little help at the right place the others were conquered, and the girl lifted a grateful face to hers as she thanked her.

On their way home a troop of girls were working off their animal spirits in a wild game of tag. Maggie in whirling suddenly came in collision with a gentleman, knocking his cane from his hand.

"Oh, I beg your pardon, sir," said Maggie, covered with confusion as she returned the cane to him. "I'm afraid I have hurt you, sir," and she looked up with frank solicitude in her eyes.

"Not at all, my dear," he responded heartily, pleased by her courteous manner. "Go on with your play and be happy. I am proud to doff my hat to so polite a young lady," which he did with a stately bow and passed on.

"He did you dare?" I should have been too much frightened to have said a thing," exclaimed one of the girls. "So should I," chorused the others.

There was a social in the church parlors that week. Jennie sat hovering near Maggie, learning a sweet lesson in their favorite songs, a lady paused to speak to them. Maggie instantly arose and proffered her a chair, which was accepted with a pleased smile after Maggie had insisted upon it.

The two girls started for the other room where the young people were preparing for games. Just then Maggie espied a solitary figure sitting in the corner. This was the deacon's wife, who was somewhat deaf. After a handshake and a sentence through the ear trumpet people usually left her to herself, as the majority of people mumble or speak too readily to be understood through her trumpet.

Maggie crossed the room to her, and taking the trumpet in her hand, being careful to articulate so as not to make her affliction more conspicuous, she sat and chatted half an hour away, amusing the dear old lady by repeating the pleasantest and jokes that were flying from lip to lip of those around them.

"You have been a great comfort to me, my bonnie lass," said the old lady, patting the hand that held the trumpet. "Now go and play with the rest. I thank you, my dear, for your thoughtfulness to an old lady like me," and Maggie went away quite happy. As soon as she appeared several voices exclaimed: "Oh, here comes Maggie Fitch! Let her be Ruth. Come, Maggie and be blithed!"

Maggie laughingly submitted, and a moment later was giving "Jacob" a lively chase around the ring. She always put her whole heart into everything she did.

"I think I have found out Maggie's charm," said Jennie to her mother the next morning. "It is because she is so good to everybody."

"Yes, that is it," answered her mother. She is thoughtful, kind, polite and obliging. I think she must carry the Golden Rule very near to her heart."

A Fashion Spotted. A curious instance of how a fashion was nipped in the bud took place in New York during the early part of the century. A party of young swells—possibly the advanced guard of the present army of Anglomaniacs—one day rigged up a coach and six horses and drove around town in style. This incited another clique of young men, who not to be outdone at this sort of thing, immediately fitted out a coach-and-eight and appeared upon the principal streets in great splendor. So amusing was this to the workmen of the town that a party of sixteen carmen, determining to burlesque the whole affair, dressed themselves in clean white frocks and appeared in the most fashionable parts of the town in a new coach, which was driven by no less than sixteen horses tandem.

Each man had his hair powdered. Thirteen acted as postillions, and the extraordinary appearance of this singular vehicle sent a loud guffaw from one end of the town to the other. So ridiculous did the carmen make this absurd custom of emulation appear that no further attempt was made on the part of the young swells, who, however, took the thing in such good part that one of them wrote an ode called "Carmen Triumphus."

The Lehigh Valley Railway is said to have purchased the Niagara Central Railway. Caroline Kirby, of Farrandsville, has just finished making a quilt of 5000 pieces.
