Sprinkling the plants with a decoc tion of tobacco stems and soft soap, followed by a dusting of lime, is recom mended by P. T. Quinn as an effective preventive for the flea-beetle, so destructive in many gardens.

As a manure I have tobaco stems valuable in the garden, especially for radishes, beets and melons. I scatter them over the ground in the fall and in the spring turn them under, then use manure in the hills or drills.

Dead or decaying wood is always a prolific breeding place for injurious insects. Those dead limbs in your apple trees may have been a harbor for borers all summer. It is by carelessness and neglect of this sort that we make trouble for ourselves in fruit growing.

The large yields of grain the past season can be repeated nearly every yield of wheat on every acre makes a difference of millions of bushels, and it can more than be obtained by thorough cultivation and the use of fertilizers and selected seed. Indiana claims to be the greatest wheat-growing State in the world in proportion to area. One farmer reports 9000 bushels threshed from 300 acres. The average yield per acre is above 20 bushels. One way to lessen the number of insects next season is to rake up all material that may serve as harboring places. It is in the undisturbed locations that the eggs of injurious insects are deposited, and to clean out the corners of fences and the heaps of litter, which should be burnt, will save time in the spring.

The old canes and branches of blackberries are very convenient to cover strawberries in places where other covering would be scratched off by hens. They do not blow off easily, and hens will not disturb them. Potato tops are good covering for strawberries, as they contain no weed seed, and they make a very fertilizing mulch.

To procure eggs in the winter season, warm quarters for the hens is very important. Hens that are fed nothing but grain during the winter will not lay, as grain is deficient in the material that produces eggs. Feed a variety of tood. Chopped clover hay, scalded, meat, milk, potatoes and cabbage should be allowed in addition to grain.

A pint of oats, with all the clover hay she cau eat, is an excellent ration for one ewe. If strong and vigorous lambs are desired, the ewes must be fed liberally during the winter. They do not require a large amount of grain, nor should they be made too fat, but they should be kept in good condition. Plenty of hay is better for them than a Sarsaparilla, as it actually demonstrates surfeit of grain.

surfeit of grain. Do not hoe weedy ground in wet weather. This simply transplants weeds, and after one or two such opera-weeds, and after one or two such opera-tion to building up medicine, try weeds, and after one or two such operations they provide themselves with multitudes of fine roots that cling in the soil whenever uprooted and make it almost impossible to kill the plants. This repeated transplanting is just what is needed by cabbage and celery plants to make them live. Do not try it on weeds.
