UNCHANGED.

Lean back with all your olden grace, And let me look my fill Upon your tender, loving face, And feel it loves me still.

The years which alter other things, Have left unchanged to you All the dear sweetness goodness brings, Which erst, before I knew

And loved you, for, ah sweet, ah sweet. Time surely passes by With lingering and reluctant feet Where you are dwelling nigh.

Few changes doth he bring to you; The same dear, perfect face;
Familiar, yet forever new,
Still full of trnth and grace,

A Day in Wonderland.

It was one of those "rare June days" when seated upon the rear platform of an Observation car I watched the constantly shifting scenery recede and vanish in the distance.

Giant monarchs of the forest quickly faded into filmy verdure and were lost to sight. Lofty hills whose crests looked rough and frowning as we swept by rapidly took on more peaceful aspects, and seemed, in the far away, to kiss the azure heavens, and smile to us a sweet good-bye. In truth the hills were green afar off," for the mellowing influence of distant space held full sway. And so it is with life, As the years roll on the scenes of earlier days are wrapped in cloudy forgetfulness. Days when there were no weather reports to beguile us into leaving our umbrellas at home. Days when the lumbering stage coach was the only "Congressional Limited," whose top-lofty driver had never dreamed of assuming the haughty and supercilious airs of the modern Pullman porter.

But when these memories come trooping out of the past, they show us an era of primitive and provincial, though sacred to the memory of our forefathers whose sturdy merit must be admitted worthy of all emulation.

"Last call for dinner," "Dining car second to the front." Our vision is gone. Summoned from dreamy meditation on the past we quickly, keenly appreciate the luxuries of modern travel as set forth on the Menu of the Pennsylvania Limited,—probably, the most perfectly equipped in the world. Composed exclusively of Pullman Vestibule Drawing and State-room, Sleeping Cars a Dining car, a Smoking car and an Observation car, the entire train represents in design, construction and finish the most acceptably results of constructive and decorative art. As all these cars are connected by Pullman Patent Safety Vestibules, ladies and children may pass from car to car without danger or the slightest exposure to weather. These Safety Vestibules not only allow freedom of movement, but imperts steadiness of motion, and diminish the danger of telescoping in case of collision.

The Smoking Car is cosily furnished, and supplied with books, periodicals and the daily papers. On the bulletin board are displayed the quotations of stocks and the commercial and general raised chiefly for meat. news of the world taken fresh from the wire at each stopping point.

A hair dressing and shaving establishment, with a bathroom attached, adjoins the smoking room. The sleeping cars embody the latest and most improved ideas of comfort and luxury for the traveling public. In addition to the appointments now expected in every fast long-distance train, the Pennsylvania Limited is marked by the following distinctive Bulletins of the latest financial and general news; Stenographer and Typewriter; Ladies' maid; Observation car. Modern ingenuity has been taxed to make this the ideal train in safety, comfort and luxury. In the Observation car is located the Stenographer with his Remington Typewriter, a machine which within ten years has completely revolutionized the methods of correspondence in the business world. His services are free. Passengers may dictate to him letters or telegrams which will be duly transcribed on his machine and mailed or forwarded at the next stopping point. And so it is, that the
