Old-Time Girls.
The World Would Be Better if There Were More of Them.
Chicago Herald.
There is something that is getting to be awfully scarce in this world. Shall I tell you what it is? It is girls. That is what is missing out of the sentiment, bright, living world just now. We have lots of young ladies and lots of young misses, but the new, sweet, old-fashioned girl of ever so long ago are vanishing with the poke bonnet and the cinnamon cookies. Let me enumerate a few of the kind of girls wanted. In the first place we want home girls—girls who are mother's right hand; girls who can cook the little ones next best to mamma, and smooth out the tangles in the domestic skein when things get twisted; girls whom father takes comfort in for something better than beauty, and the big brothers are proud of for something that outranks the ability to dance or shine in society. Next we want girls of sense—girls who have a standard by their own, regardless of conventionalities, and are independent enough to live up to it; girls who simply won't wear a trailing dress on the street to gather up microbes and all sorts of defilement; girls who won't wear a high hat to the theater, or lacerate their feet and endanger their health with high heels and corsets; girls who will wear what is pretty and becoming, and snap their fingers at the dictates of fashion when fashion is horrid and silly.
And we want good girls—girls who are sweet, right straight out from the heart to the lips; innocent and pure and simple girls, with less knowledge of sin and duplicity and evil-doing than the heart of the little ones next best to often; girls who say their prayers and read their Bibles and love God and his commandments. (We want those girls awful bad!) And we want careful girls and prudent girls, who think enough of the generous father who toils to maintain them in comfort, and the gentle mother who denies herself much that they may have so many pretty things to count the cost and draw the line between the essentials and non-essentials, girls who strive to save and not to spend; girls who are unselfish and eager to be a joy and a comfort in the home, rather than an expensive and useless burden. We want girls with hearts—girls who are full of tenderness and sympathy, with tears that flow for other people's ills, and smiles that light outward their own beautiful thoughts. We have lots of clever girls, and brilliant girls, and witty girls, warm hearted and impulsive girls; kind and entertaining to their own folks, and with little desire to shine in the garish world. With a few such girls scattered around, life would freshen up for all of us, as the weather does under the spell of summer showers. Speed the day when this sort of girl fills the world once more, overrunning the spaces where God puts them, as climbing roses do when they break through the trellis to glimmer and glint above the common highway, a blessing and a boon to all who pass them by.

Mexico at the Fair.
Ten thousand is the estimate that Lieut. Baker makes on the number of Mexicans who will participate in the exposition. Lieut. Baker has just returned from Mexico, and says the interest in the exposition amounts to enthusiasm. While in Mexico he visited nearly every state of that republic, and gives the following general statement of exhibits that may be expected from them: From Nuevo Leon, relics of the intervention; textile fiber, the plant and all processes for the manufacture of fiber from it, all kinds of cereals and minerals. The state of Tamaulipas will send a full exhibit. From Tampico, in the state of the same name, will be sent a model and relief map in colors showing the river jetty now constructed in that harbor, also a very fine display of cabinet woods and medical plants. Here Mr. Baker also secured a valuable collection of Indian idols for the archeological department. From Jalisco there will be sent robes, serapes and felt hats and a large and varied agricultural and mineral exhibit. Among the agricultural exhibits from the state of Vera Cruz expected are tobacco, cocoa and medicinal plants. From Puebla the exhibit on onyx in large slabs and in manufactured articles will make a beautiful display. Oaxaca has been until lately completely cut off from the world by the great ranges of mountains separating it from the remainder of the republic. A railroad to the capital is now in construction and the ethnological and archeological displays from these states will be very large and valuable and an exhibit particularly interesting will be that of the artistic needlework of the natives. In a general way Lieut. Baker says that interest in the fair is manifested by all Mexicans, from the humblest private citizen in the most remote states to the President of the republic, and that the general exhibits from that country will more than meet the greatest expectations of the visitors to the exposition.
Lieut. Baker was, until recently, the special commissioner to Mexico, but is now in charge of the marine division of the transportation department. He arrived in Chicago the other day to take charge of his new department.

A Popular Anthology.
Miss Rose Terry Cooke and Her Excellent Work.
Some thirty or thirty-five years ago the name of Rose Terry Cooke appeared frequently in the magazines and papers of this country, attached to some of the most bright and original stories and charming poems coming from any of our American authors. The leading story in the first number of the Atlantic monthly was from her pen, says Farm and Home, and from that time until this it has been pretty busily employed for the pleasure and good of those who delight in pure and sparkling stories, sketches and verse. After awhile the name became Rose Terry Cooke, and under that title, which she has signed since her marriage to R. H. Cooke, 1873, she has done much of her best work.
Though the name of Rose Terry Cooke became a very popular one among readers, little was known or written of the person herself, for in those times, a quarter of century or more ago, writers were not interviewed and written up and solicited for photographs and autographs as they are now. It was known that she lived in Connecticut and her stories showed that she was a New Englander born and bred. She surpassed any other writer in those days in depicting the delicate shades and feelings and habits of New England rural life, and though there are many writers now who work most brightly and entertainingly in that field, they have none of them improved upon the original patterns of Mrs. Cooke. A large amount of her work, which has been appearing in magazines through all these years, has never been collected in book form. A collection of her poems was published before her marriage and a few volumes of her stories have been issued since. One of her longer stories, entitled "Steadfast," was issued in a volume about two years ago, and last season there was published a collection of some of her later stories called "Huckleberries from the New England Hills."
Much that Mrs. Cooke has written in verse form is charmingly musical and spiritually lovely. "The Two Villages," beginning:
Over the river on the hill
Lies a village of the same still;
has been printed and reprinted numberless times and is an example of sweet and touching rhythm. It is one of her poems which became universally popular. But perhaps the most of the true soul of her poetry and beauty of expression is found in the often quoted poem, "Trailing Arbutus."
Spotted Children.
From Harper's Bazar.
Spotted children are not the product of effete civilization. They have always existed, literally since the beginning of our race, for the first child was Cain, and in the light of his subsequent career we cannot doubt that Eve allowed the wonderful little creature his own way in everything. Original sin was then so new, so fresh that the baby had it in its undiluted potency, and the young mother, most hapless of women, never had a mother of her own to guide and instruct her. Other instances of spotted children could be easily cited from the Scriptures records—Jacob his mother's darling, and Absalom, the pride of David's heart, coming at once to mind—but it is not necessary to turn to the past, we have the species always with us; perhaps in our own homes may be found choice, well developed specimens. There are rigid disciplinarians who believe that a child should never be permitted to have its own way, even when that way is a good one, neither injurious to itself nor disagreeable to others. Were theirs the universal rule originality would be totally suppressed, and the law of love become obsolete. Brought up in the rigid atmosphere of sternness and constant repression, a child may learn to behave with perfect propriety, but it is none the less a failure, and a pitiable one.
The little ones are entitled to loving care, to tender caresses, and sweet words of endearment. It is only when they become injudiciously indulgent that the process of spoiling begins. It is so pleasant and easy to give up to little exactions, to laugh at the naughty yet winsome actions, that the rosebud is surrounded with prickly thorns, the kitten's sharp claws are grown before we awaken to the fact that our own precious darling is a high priced pet at least, if not a commanding officer, in the great army of enfantes gateres. It sounds better in French—the foreign syllables are less downright—but there is no softening the hard reality away, and then, with a remorseful consciousness that it is our child who has become a "nuisance"—the favorite term applied to the spoiled children of other people—we endeavor to remedy the matter energetically upon the task of rooting up the noxious weeds which are choking the growth of all that is sweet and attractive in the youthful character. And with a sigh of contrition we deplore our own failures, and resolve to be more vigilant.
We will not, we must not, let the little darlings be ruined by our inefficiency. And so, taking courage, we begin over again, looking cheerfully forward to the days when, as grandmothers, we can exercise the privileges of that dignity, and spoil to our hearts content.

The Home for the Printers.
Opened With Simple but Impressive Ceremonies at Colorado Springs.
COLORADO SPRINGS, May 12.—This a gala day for Colorado Springs. To-day the Childs-Drexel Home for Printers was dedicated, it being also the sixty-third anniversary of the birth of Mr. Childs, one of the patrons of the Home. The noted philanthropist and party reached here yesterday afternoon and were handsome received by the citizens. Besides the party of Mr. Childs, the city has as its guests over 600 members of the National Editorial Association, on their way to the National Convention at San Francisco.
At 10:30 this morning a special train arrived from Denver, bearing Governor Rout, his staff, the light Artillery and 500 printers and their friends. Immediately upon the arrival of the train the procession was formed and marched through the principal streets to the Home, which is situated about a mile from the centre of the town. The Governor made the opening speech, and an oration was pronounced by Senator Gallinger, of New Hampshire.
George W. Childs, one of the founders of the Home, occupied the position of honor on the platform. It was his 63rd birthday, and he made a brief but interesting speech. Many representative printers from all over the country, as well as members of the National Editorial Association, were present. Telegrams to Mr. Childs congratulating him on his 63rd birthday were received by him from all parts of the country. John G. Whittier, the poet, wrote, saying: "I see thee continue in thy well doing for the welfare of thy fellow men. I send thee my greatest respect and esteem."
The home building is four stories

MAKES THE WEAK STRONG.
The way in which Hood's Sarsaparilla builds up people in run down or weakened state of health, conclusively proves the claim that this medicine "makes the weak strong." It does not act like a stimulant, imparting fictitious strength from which there must follow a reaction of greater weakness than before, but in the most natural way Hood's Sarsaparilla overcomes that tired feeling, creates an appetite, purifies the blood, and, in short, gives great bodily, nerve, mental and digestive strength.
JUDGE D. S. KING
One of the best citizens of Ohio, writes:
"April 18, 1892,
"I was for several years subject to bad spells of Sick Headache and Neuralgia, and tried various remedies and prescriptions without benefit therefrom. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla and it relieved me from the first. I thought it best to continue till I had taken six bottles and it cured me entirely."
Mrs. N. E. KING,
Wilmington, O.
REV. SYLVANUS LANE
Of the Cincinnati M. E. Conference, voluntarily says: "We have for years used HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA in our family of five, and find it fully equal to all that is claimed for it. Some people are greatly prejudiced against patent medicine, but I think a patent article is better than one unworthy a patent. How the patent can hurt a medicine and not a machine is a mystery of mysteries to me."
