Pinkerton battle, or not, and despite the forced smiles and jokes which prevailed at the time of their departure there was an under current of sadness beating against many hearts which had the semplance of merriment.

Down on the Jacksonville road, about four miles below this place, lives a father whose two sons are with the company and it was upon him that some one, on joking bent, played one of their ill timed tricks. While in the harvest field he was told that the soldiers had had an engagement resulting in eleven killed among whom was one of his sons. The old man became almost frantic and hastened from the field to this place to learn that the whole story was a lie.

If the joker could realize half the ang uish that father felt while hurrying to get news from his child we fancy he would be more careful next time.
