WHERE ARE THE WICKED FOLKS BURIED.

BY P. C. HOLTEN. Tell me, gray-headed sexton, I said, "Where in this field are the wicked folk laid I have wandered, the quiet old graveyard through, And studied the epitaphs, old and new; But on monument, or tomb, pillar or stone, I read of no evil that men have done."

The Harmony of Flowers.

How They Should be Arranged to the Best Advantage.

The flowers of the forest and the field are in their glory now. Garden blossoms are also in their prime, for the June roses are not yet out of bloom, the honeysuckles are laden with flowers, the Anemone lilies still rear their stately heads, while heliotrope, geraniums, sweet peas, carnations, black-eyed Susans, pansies, sweet alyssum and all the other garden favorites are doing their best. So it may not be out of the way to make a few suggestions as to modes of arranging these flowers in vases.

Perhaps some one may look scornful at the idea that everyone does not know enough to fill vases. To be sure, there are women to whom the knack seems to come by nature. There are also plenty of them whose only conception of arranging flowers is to make them into what old Hannah in "Little Women," called a "sot bokky," and the more "sot" it is, the better they are satisfied. They crowd roses, geraniums, nasturtiums and mignonette into one vase, and when they have crammed in all the flowers they can get, they survey the work of their hands with satisfaction and call it very good.

Flowers are as a rule exclusive. Each variety is confident that it belongs to one of the first families, and feels a reluctance to mix with the others. As a vocal utterance is denied them they can only show their prejudices by disagreeing with one another so far as they can and refusing to produce a harmonious effect when crowded together.

Roses are perhaps the least difficult in this respect, but even they are happier in the selectness of their own family circle. Roses should be massed in a bowl, or placed two or three together in a tall slender vase of clear glass or some neutral tint. A very choice rose is often best placed by itself in a specimen glass, with only its leaves to serve as a foil to its beauty. If one has a few rather short stemmed roses they may be put in the same vase or jar with honeysuckles, ferns or mignonette, but they will not show so well. There is a tradition that the water for other plants. Whether this is true or not, it is a fact that the blossom looks best by itself unless mixed with a few roses of delicate tints or with carnations or sweet peas. The last harmonize charmingly with mignonette, both in appearance and in perfume, and is a delicious accompaniment.

Carnations must have a strain of plebeian blood, for they will mix with almost any associates. They only insist upon harmony of color, but with mignonette, heliotrope, sweet alyssum, roses, honeysuckles and almost anything else sized or tall vases are best for them, and they, like most other flowers, are charming in a pitcher.

Nasturtiums should be arranged in a rather deep bowl, with no foliage but their leaves. No other perfume accords with their pungent fragrance. Geraniums are best in the garden, but when they are gathered for the house they should be plucked with some regard for unity or pleasing contrast of color and not picked indiscriminately. Only their own leaves or ferns should be put with them, and a bowl should hold them.

A pitcher is prettiest for honeysuckles and if there is a dearth of other flowers they will make almost as satisfactory fillings as do ferns, lemon verbena or Geranium leaves.

Lilies should stand alone in great tall jars and pansies should fill tiny vases, we cream pitchers or small teacups and saucers. It is a pretty fancy to put a vase of pansies in front of a clock, not only because the "thoughts" recall the flight of time, but in the hope that time as it passes may be accompanied by heartsease.

Garden flowers and wild flowers should not be put in the same vase. They appear as ill at ease thus placed as would a professional beauty from town and a rustic belle side by side. Each is lovely in its place, but together—oh, no!

The time of wild roses is nearly past, but they may still be found in shaded spots. They bear little resemblance to their stately sisters of the garden, but they are like them in at least one particular—they look best when in a bowl or vase alone with their leaves. And they must not be crowded either. Each must have room to display its own charms without being jostled by a rival.

The daisies are not so. They like a crowd and never show to such advantage as when they are massed in a big jar or pitcher or deep bowl. They do not need even green leaves, but prefer displaying their pure white and yellow unrelieved by other color.

The so-called "yellow daisies" or wild corncocks, on the contrary, need a certain amount of green to soften their over-brilliant coloring. Covers should be placed by themselves, the white and pink together in a shallow dish, and buttercups are better when contrasted with ferns.

Here in the Middle States we do not often find the wealth of wild flowers which make so beautiful the New England meadows. Vetches are not common with us, though they are sometimes found, nor is the hardback, with its white and pale and deep pink blossoms, often seen. Lupin and moccasin flowers, sand violets and sabatia grow less frequently here than further north.

But there are even here little nameless roadside blossoms that are charming in vases. The white and yellow St. John's wort or "butter-and-eggs," the little-appreciated wild carrot with its feathery flowers and still more feathery leaves, the gorgeous orange orbis, the snap dragon, the touch-me-not or fly catcher, the tiger lily, the yarrow and many others.

There are few that do not accommodate themselves readily to their surroundings and look charmingly at ease when taken from their obscurity and placed in a parlor or dining room.

It seems now a far cry to the time of the golden-rod, but it will not be long before the yellow spikes will hit their every fence corner and along every roadside, ready to be gathered and placed in tall pitchers and jars, alone or mingled with white, delicate lilac or deep purple asters.

The cardinal flowers and the white sagittarius are nearly due, too, and they contrast charmingly when placed in the same tall glass vase.

There is hardly a nook or corner in the house where flowers may not be placed with good effect. Upon the breakfast table they are a sine qua non. After a warm, restless night the sight and smell of a glass of nasturtium, a pitcher of daisies, or a bowl of water lilies are cheering and refreshing.

In the hall should stand a tall jar of green ferns—the great brakes to be found in the depths of the woods—and yellow daisies. In the drawing room their should be a bowl of wild or garden roses, a cup and saucer of pansies, a tiny vase of mignonette or sweet peas. Every bedroom should have its glass of flowers, that may be set outside at night and replaced in the morning.

If possible, outside of the front door, on the veranda, should be another big jar or pitcher, like that in the hall. Fill this with some sturdy blossoms branches of the blooms of the tulip or the button-bell tree, or sumach, horse-chestnut or catalpa.

It should be the special business of one person to look after the vases, to replace the withered flowers with fresh ones and to renew the water. This one person should be the daughter of the house, where there is one, and where there is none it will do a growing or a grown boy no harm to assume these duties.

They need not require half an hour a day if it is arranged, but that half hour is more than a busy housekeeper can always spare, and if she has no one to whom she will have to content herself with the flowers for the table and for the family sitting room.

It is better to go without the flowers altogether than to have them neglected in the vases until they are faded and ill-smelling—an offense alike to sight and smell.

Is all this discouraging to the city woman, whose fagged back yard is her only garden plot and the park her only meadow? Yet even to her the consolation of window boxes are not denied. By their help she may bring a bit of summer to her windows, if not to her doors. Madeira vines and ivies, morning glories and cypress vines, will climb from pots. Geraniums, roses, mignonette, heliotrope, pansies and nasturtiums will flourish in boxes, and it will go hard with the flower lover but what she will keep a few blossoms in dining-room or on her desk or work table.

A MILLION FRIENDS.—A friend in need is a friend indeed, and not less than one million people have found just such a friend in Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs, and Colds.—If you have never used this Great Cough Medicine, one trial will convince you that it has wonderful curative powers in all the diseases of the Chest and Lungs. Each bottle is guaranteed to do all that is claimed or money will be refunded. Trial bottles free at Parrish's Drug store. Large bottles 50c. and $1.00.

Ben Butler is said to be sadly bent with age. His face has the look of health, but his massive frame has become an unmistakable burden. His hands move unsteadily while his eyes appear swollen and almost hidden by the thick folds of flesh on his cheeks. But his head is clear as a bell, and at seventy-four there is no shrewd lawyer or politician in New England.

Mr. John Carpenter, of Goodland Ind., says: "I tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, for diarrhea and severe cramps and pains in the stomach and bowels with the best results. In the worst cases never had to give more than the third dose to effect a cure. In most cases one dose will do. Besides its other good qualities it is pleasant to take." 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Frank P. Green.

What It Does.

- Hood's Sarsaparilla. 1. Purifies the blood. 2. Creates an appetite. 3. Strengthens the nerves. 4. Makes the weak strong. 5. Overcomes that tired feeling. 6. Cures scrofula, salt rheumatism, etc. 7. Invigorates the kidney and liver. 8. Relieves headache, indigestion dyspepsia.

"It is not the dancing, but the hugging, that is improper," says a preacher. This complicates the matter.

Malarial and atmospheric influences are best counteracted by keeping the blood pure and vigorous with Ayer's Sarsaparilla. A little caution in this respect may prevent serious illness at this season. Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best all-the-year-round medicine in existence.

Names of Pennsylvania Towns.

Villages in southeastern Pennsylvania, and even hundreds (townships) in Delaware, not infrequently take their names from old inns. Bird in Hand, Lancaster, Pa., is an example of the sort, and in northern Delaware the old Red Lion inn has given name to a village and a township. The village and the township of Black Bird in Delaware also probably take the common name from the sign of an old inn. Fox Chase, in the lower edge of Chester county, Pa., was the picturesque name of a village that grew up about an ancient tavern, but the post office department has ruthlessly changed it to Appleton.

Many Languages in German Colonies.

The Germans are trying to count the languages that are spoken in their colonial possessions. In east Africa they have found fifty languages, in south-west Africa, twelve; in Cameroons, twenty; in Toga, five or six. These figures do not include a large number of dialects which are almost equivalent in some cases to another language. The Germans have no idea yet how many languages are spoken in their South Sea possessions, but they have thus far counted fifty. Their missionaries and agents are hard at work reducing the languages which are most used to writing and making dictionaries of them.

AT HAND.—In a dangerous emergency, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is prompt to act and sure to cure. A dose taken on the first symptoms of Croup or Bronchitis, checks further progress of these complaints. It is agreeable to the taste, does not interfere with digestion, and a dose taken as a remedy for colds, coughs, and even consumption, in its early stages.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL excels all similar preparations. It is endorsed by leading physicians, is agreeable to the taste, does not interfere with digestion, and a dose taken usually in small doses, and "From repeated tests in my own family, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has proved itself a very efficient remedy for colds, coughs, and the various disorders of the throat and lungs."—A. W. Barlett, Pittsburg, N. Y.

"For the last 25 years I have been taking Ayer's Cherry Pectoral for lung troubles, and am assured that its use has SAVED MY LIFE.—I have recommended it to hundreds. I find the most effective way of taking this medicine is in small and frequent doses."—T. M. Matthews, P. M. Sherman Ohio. "My wife suffered from a cold; nothing helped her but Ayer's Cherry Pectoral which effected a cure."—R. Amey, Plympton, N. S.

The Titan of Chasms. A Mile Deep, 15 Miles Wide, 217 Miles Long, and Painted Like a Painter. The Grand Canon of the Colorado River, in Arizona, is now for the first time easily accessible to tourists. A regular stage line has been established from Flagstaff, Arizona, on the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad, making the trip from Flagstaff to the most imposing part of the Canon in less than 12 hours. The stage fare for the round trip is only $25.00, and meals and comfortable lodgings are provided throughout the trip at a reasonable price. The view of the Grand Canon afforded at the terminus of the stage route is the most stupendous panorama known in nature. There is also a trail at this point leading down the Canon wall, more than 6,000 feet vertically, to the river below. The descent of the trail is a grander experience than climbing the Alps, for in the bottom of this terrific a sublime chasm are hundreds of mountains greater than any of the Alpine range.

A book describing the trip to the Grand Canon, illustrated by many full-page engravings from special photographs, and furnishing all the necessary information, may be obtained free on an application to Geo. J. Byrne, 725 Monmouth Block, Chicago, Ill. 37-30-30

Speaking of Flying.

Some men, some fly, and some are limited in their senses than one, but the new fast trains on the Union Pacific System are out of sight while the other fellows are getting their wings fixed. The remarkable time of 13 hours and 25 minutes from Omaha to Denver made by the "Denver Fast Mail" is specially commended by those in its hours via Omaha and the Union Pacific System, you save fifteen hours and fifty minutes over all competition; to San Francisco in 67 hours via Omaha and the Union Pacific System, you save twelve hours and thirty minutes over all competition.
