James G. Blaine Dead. The Great Political Owl Calmly Sinks to Rest.—He Died of Both Kidney Disease and Consumption—Calmly, but Unable to Speak—His Attentions from the President.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 27.—Ex-Secretary of State James G. Blaine, passed silently and painlessly away just as the clock struck 11 this morning. He was conscious and recognized his wife and others, who had been waiting around his bed since 10 o'clock for the final moment; but he was too exhausted to speak. He understood perfectly that he was dying, and with his eyes showed appreciation of the words of farewell tenderly uttered by his loved ones.

Mrs. Blaine said to him shortly before he died: "You remember Walker and Emmons and Alice? You know where they have gone, and where you are going?" The dying man with a great effort slowly raised the forefinger of his right hand until it pointed toward heaven, while his dull eye flashed out an old-time look of bright intelligence. This was his last conscious act. At last the marvellous vitality which had held death off since Sunday, December 18, sustained mainly by milk and other liquid foods, had failed, and the end had come. Even the family and the physicians, who had seen him actually dying for over a month—wasting and weakening until he had become almost a mere shadow, mentally and physically, of his former self—were surprised by his death. Having thus lived so long, it seemed as though he might live on. His daughters, especially Hattie, his favorite ("Little H," as he called her), even hoped that he might recover. The physicians knew, and Mrs. Blaine knew, that this could not be.

HE DIED A PRESBYTERIAN. Mr. Blaine died in the Protestant faith and will be buried with the rites of the Presbyterian church. Rev. Dr. Hamlin, pastor of the Church of the Covenant (President Harrison's Church, where the Blaines had a pew until last year, and where Mr. Blaine in November last reappeared on two consecutive Sundays), has been recognized as the spiritual adviser of the household; but has been unable, owing to Mr. Blaine's condition, to have conversation with him. The family desire it stated, however, that Mr. Blaine died a Protestant. There is no doubt that Mr. Blaine's brother and sister, who belong to the Catholic Church, hoped he would become a Catholic.

Mr. Blaine died of a complication of diseases—of kidney trouble, which resembled Bright's disease; of tuberculous affection of the lungs and of irregular and poorly sustained action of the heart. TO BE BURIED IN WASHINGTON. Mr. Blaine's body will be interred in Oak Hill cemetery, a beautiful resting place of the dead, situated on the slope of the Rock creek banks in Georgetown. Although Mr. Blaine's name and fame are inseparably connected with the state of Maine, but one of his family lies under its soil. His eldest son and daughter, Walker Blaine and Mrs. Coppinger, are interred in Oak Hill, in a lot which the dead man himself selected and purchased three years ago. When the body of Walker Blaine lay in the house awaiting interment Mr. Blaine, accompanied by a friend, walked over to Oak Hill and selected the lot in which his well-beloved son was placed, and which soon afterwards received the body of Mrs. Coppinger. It lies in the eastern part of the cemetery, half way down the terrace, on the western bank of the creek. No stone yet marks the graves of the children of the ex-secretary. The body of Emmons Blaine lies in one of the Chicago cemeteries, so that aside from this department of the department of the northern department of Washington's army during the revolution, was James G. Blaine's grandfather. When 11 years old he went to live with his uncle, Thomas Ewing, in Ohio, where his mother's father, Neal Gillespie, an accomplished scholar, directed his studies. Later he attended Washington college at Washington, Pa., graduating at the age of 17.

After leaving college Mr. Blaine taught school at Blue Lock Spring, Kentucky. It was at a professor in the military school there that he made the acquaintance of Miss Stanwood the lady who afterwards became his wife. Later he went to Philadelphia, where he taught school and studied law; but after two years he abandoned his law studies, went to Maine, and became proprietor of the Kennebec Journal. He was one of the most active of the framers of the Republican party, and was a delegate to the Philadelphia convention of 1850, which nominated Fremont.

After serving as speaker of the Maine legislature, he was sent to congress, and began his national career in 1852, with the outbreak of the war. During the Forty-first, Forty-second and Forty-third congresses he was speaker of the House. Mr. Blaine's administration of the speakership is commonly regarded as one of the most brilliant and successful in the annals of the House. He had rare aptitude and equipment for the duties of presiding officer, and his complete mastery of parliamentary law, his dexterity and physical endurance, his rapid dispatch of business and his firm and impartial spirit were recognized on all sides. It was during his occupancy of the speaker's chair, in 1874, that he took the floor and succeeded in defeating the passage of the original Force bill. The political revolution of 1874 placed the Democrats in control of the House, and Mr. Blaine became the leader of the minority. The session preceding the presidential contest of 1876 was a period of stormy and vehement contest. On the 21st of May a resolution was adopted in the House to investigate an alleged purchase by the Union Pacific Railroad Company at an excessive price, of certain bonds of the Little Rock and Fort Smith road. It soon became evident that the investigation was aimed at Mr. Blaine. An extended business correspondence on his part with Warren Fisher, of Boston, running three years and relating to various transactions, had fallen into the hands of a clerk, named Mulligan, and it was alleged, that the production of this correspondence would confirm the imputation against Mr. Blaine.

When Mulligan was summoned to Washington, Mr. Blaine possessed himself of the letters, together with a memorandum that contained the full index and abstract. On the 5th of June he arose to a personal explanation, and after denying the power of the House to compel the production of his private papers and his willingness to go to any extremity in defense of his rights, he declared that he proposed to reserve nothing. Holding up the letters he exclaimed: "Thank God! I am ashamed to show them." There is the very original package, and with some sense of humiliation, with a mortification I do not attempt to conceal, with a sense of courage which I think any man in my position would feel, I invite the confidence of forty-four millions of my countrymen while I read these letters. The demonstration closed with a dramatic scene. Josiah Caldwell, one of the originators of the Little Rock and Fort Smith road, who had full knowledge of the whole transaction, was traveling in Europe, and both sides were seeking to communicate with him. After finishing the reading of the letters, Mr. Blaine turned to the chairman of the committee and demanded to know whether he had received any dispatch from Mr. Caldwell. He received an evasive answer. Mr. Blaine asserted, as within his own knowledge, "that the chairman had received such a dispatch, completely and absolutely exonerating me from this charge, and you have suppressed it."

Many Tons of Ice.

Stored by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company for Use Next Summer.

On the Pittsburg division of the Pennsylvania railroad, says the Pittsburg Post, there has already been harvested and stored over 9,000 tons of ice for use on the trains and in the stations on the division next summer. The big houses at East Liberty have received 6,500 tons, and those at Nineval 3,000. But even this amount will not be all, and at least 3,000 more tons will be packed into buildings along the main line and branches. If next season be an especially warm one this 24,000,000 pounds, the harvesting of which will cost the company not less than $36,000, will be insufficient to supply the demands, and it will be necessary to purchase 2,000 or 3,000 tons more in order to get through the season.

The Pennsylvania people endeavor as far as possible to provide for their needs, for when ice has to be purchased and is shipped from a distance, there is always a considerable loss, which in railroad parlance is called "shrinkage." It is due to chipping, melting, etc. By the way, it would be interesting to know just what the ice bill of the commonwealth Pennsylvania amounts to for one season. It would certainly run away up in the hundreds of thousands of dollars.
