Across the Great Desert.

Incidents of a Journey Across the Sand Plain.

The preparations for the start seem unusually slow and tedious this morning as though both men and beasts were loth to let go this last skirt of civilization and embark on the dreary wastes of the desert. At length, however, the last camel has submitted to his load, As a general thing the skunks sally the last pull of the kalian (water pipe) has been inhaled by his driver, and the long file of camels begins to wind out from the enclosures of the little village.

We soon leave behind the last struggling attempts at cultivation, and the vast plain of the great desert stretches before us in all its dreary desolation. At first we find ourselves on coarse, yellowish gravel, rising in low, gentle un. dulations, like the swell of ocean subsiding after a storm Vegetation has mistakable relish. not yet entirely disappeared. Track there is none. We are the first caravan to cross this Autumn, and have to strike out a fresh track for ourselves.

After a few hours' traveling the last vestige of plant life disappears. Not a twig, not the smallest blade of grass can be seen, and we know it will be some five days before we see the next. The gravel has changed its character, and now consists of small, flattish rounded pebbles, of a glossy black, with an understratum of lighter colored

The surface is a delightful one to travel on, firm and smooth as a well kept garden path, still rising and falling in a gentle swell. Here last year's tracks are plainly visible, narrow paths of lighter color, where the black surface pebbles have been displaced by the camels' feet. As the sun begins to approach the western horizon our guide calls a halt--at nowhere in particular it would seem, as there is absolutely no thing to distinguish the spot among the surrounding leagues of smooth black gravel. The day has been oppressively hot, the thermometer standing in the railr ad companies to sell excursion tickneighborhood of ninty-five degrees in | ets to Unicago on accout of the World's the shade, but the moment the sun'goes | Columbian Exposition on a basis of $ 0 glad of a thick ulster. ghastly plains, which seem as if they might be part of a surface of a dead planet The smooth black gravel above described extend over but a small portion-that nearest the outer edges of the region. Beyond this is found a wide tract of loose, coarse said, which the wind has raised in waves.

The central deserts of Persia consists of a plateau with two central depressions. They form roughly a figure eight, of which the longer axis runs litely. from north-west to south-east, and of "Yes. Well, which each oval is an elevated shallow train on west?" basin whose edges are about 3,000 and centre about 1,000 feet above sea level. They are separated by a narrow neck of hilly country, which is but little less than a desert than the rest but contains a few widaly scattered springs of fresh and my clo'es suggest whippoor wills water and a few miserable villages.

The tirm, black gravel if found chiefly on the higher ground at the edges. The coarse, loose sand is a little lower. Then the ground breaks into strange blocks and mounds of the Shahr-i-Lut. which, as we descend, give place to the Ihe Kavir, and in the lowest part of all is the salt swamp. Whatever water falls on the basin naturally finds its way so this spot, and sinking through the loose upper soil, dissolves the stratum, causing it to effervesce and throw the overlying beds of sand into the strange forms seen in the Kavir, while in the very centre sufficient salt is dissolved to dominate the mud, and when dry, to form great sheets of glistening salt on the surface. The climate of the great desert I have said before, remarkable for sudden and extreme variations of temperature, and the region can only be crossed with safety from October to April. Even during these three months the traveler is likely to be over taken by hurricanes. My guides informed me that these storms are sometimes accompanied by snow, in which case they are frequently fatal. In summer the intense heat and the prevalence of the wind which we call the simoon, and the Persian the bad. i-sam render it madness to attempt to cross this desert. To be overtaken by a simoon is said to be certain death. From the description given by Persians, the fatal effects of this wind would seem to be produced by the sudden and complete abstraction of every particle of moisture from bodies with which it comes in contact .- London Graphic.

your Chestnut Coke-that excellent substito stones on line of Mrs. Stine, the place of beginning. Containing 42 acres and 16 perches neat measure. Thereon erected a small house, small barn and other outbuildings. Seized taken in execution and to be sold as tute for hard coal. We are delighted with it-it makes a speedy, bright and intensely hot fire. We have succeeded in keeping fire with it, in our self feeder, all night. It has this advantage also-it is deprived of bitumen (which makes smoke), sulphur and other extraneous All that certain tract of land situate in the township of Boggs, in the county of Centre and state of Penna. It is surprising, that its good qualities, as an article of fuel for domestic purposes, are so little known or, comparatively, so little used, especially, when we consider its comparative cheapness. Please send me another load at your earliest convenience and oblige. Yours respectfully,

McCalmont & Co have recently purchased a CRUSHER by which they crush and prepare coke-chestnut, stove and egg sizes, for use in cook stoves, ranges, as well as all classes of heating stoves and furnaces for use in houses, churches, school houses and shops. There is twice the bulk in a ton of coke, that there is in a ton of hard coal; but there is more carbon, actual burning material, than there is in a ton of hard coal. It all burnsthere is no slate or clinker to contend with, hence there is a large gain to the consumer in this particular BECAUSE THERE IS NO WASTE. Some persons have found fault with it, because it makes too hot a fire. This is caused, because of the use of too much coke at a time, which requires to much draft, when, thorough combustion takes place it creates too much heat hence the complaint. Learn how much coke you need in your stove and how much draft you should turn on to make the necessary heat and you will prefer to use coke to hard coal and your experience will save you money.

This coke is furnished at our yard or orders transmitted to us by telephone 1162, and 1163 will receive prompt attention. McCALMONT & CO.
