BURNS BROUGHT UP TO DATE.

If faries live, and one should visit me, And say: "A favor ask, I'll grant it thee," Think you I'd seek the craved by my brothers, To see myself as I beg the genie off, Ah no; this would I beg the genie off, Let others see me as I see myself!

A Day in Eskimo Town.

People of the Frigid North as Seen at the Fair.

The Eskimo village was in an uproar. Prince Pomuk had mysteriously vanished without leaving a trace behind. Tukliwina, his stepmother, who is also the wife of his uncle, had searched in vain among all the sealskin and deer-skin tents, the odd log house and low huts of Arctic moss and sod for a glimpse of his little white-clad figure. At last in despair she awakened his uncle, Kangegatchook, who was enjoying a noontime nap on the fur floor of the dome-like white igloo, a skilful imitation of the snow tents of the bleak coast of Labrador.

A look of surprise and then of anxiety flitted across the round dark face of the short, sturdy old Eskimo. Pomuk is the favorite of the village, and although a 16-year-old prince, stands but 40 inches high in his sealskin shoes. His father, who was chief of the Kikertaksoaks, and a famous hunter of walrus and polar bear, was even smaller in stature than his son. Kangegatchook started immediately for the lake, which lies at the foot of the settlement.

LITTLE ESKIMOS AT PLAY.

A lot of little Eskimo lads and girls in red-striped white hoods and jackets were playing among the trees on the border of the water, like so many tiny goblins or forest brownies. A stranger could not have told which were the boys and which the girls. Kangegatchook peeped under each big hood, but failed to find the little prince under any one of them. One was, however, his sister Kamialut, and she informed him that her brother had been over back of the trading-post trying to get one of the huskie dogs to sit up on his hind legs.

The uncle hurried back of the log trading post with the skin hanging in the doorway and the store of ivory carvings, rush baskets and fur robes for sale within. He went straight to the inclosure, where the smooth-coated, long-horned reindeer were stabled. Near by were the kennels of the "huskie" dogs, curly-haired, sharp-nosed fellows, very wolfish in appearance. Four of them even then came galloping towards him across the ground, dragging a long "kumetic" or sled, over some rails laid in default of the usual snow and ice. A merry party was enjoying the ride and the Eskimo driver in front was loudly snapping his long ypraukut, or dog whip.

Pomuk was nowhere to be seen, however. So back again he went to the lake, and called to the fur-clad Nachvack lazily paddling around the stream in a seal-skin-lined kayak. Sometimes he did not dip his double-bladed car in the water for several minutes at a time and seemed to be asleep in the canoe; but it glided along just the same, so deftly it was maneuvered.

THE MISSING PRINCE APPEARS.

Precisely at the moment that Kangegatchook called, a movement took place in the tree behind him. Suspended from one bough hung a large Arctic sleeping bag, such as he had often crawled into upon a bitter winter's night. It looked like some gigantic hornet's nest, and now it shook as if a big hornet were astir within it. Presently a little white hood emerged from the opening at the top, followed a second later by a pair of the brightest black eyes and a plump, round, quizzical face. And there was Pomuk gazing down at his uncle. He smiled so exuberantly that his eyelids almost closed together.

His uncle frowned and bestowed upon him in guttural Eskimo what was hardly a blessing—especially as Kangegatchook is one of the unchristianized natives. Pomuk promised never to fall asleep in the bag again without giving due notice, and peace reigned once more. Tukliwina hastened down to hug him, dressed the time in a garment of sealskin striped with the light fur of the jar seal. She wore trousers and boots like her husband, but her cassock was cut away about the hips and had a short flap in front and a long oval tailpiece behind, much like the tail of a walrus.

Comfortably nestled in her hood, hung at her neck, was her little baby, seemingly as happy in that strange cradle as an Indian papoose strapped to its mother's back. The little girl was born in Chicago and has been christened "Columbia Palmer," in honor of the foremost of the lady managers and Chicago's society queen. Another baby, a boy, born since the shores of Labrador were left, is exhibited outside the grounds. His name is "Christopher Columbus."

Thirty Eskimos, a colony of six families, dwell in the log houses and huts. Some are still savages. Others attend service every Sunday in the little Moravian Chapel at the upper end of the lake. They are very quiet people, compared to the inhabitants of the Plaisance, and each day go peacefully about their household work, regardless of the presence of strangers.

EXPERT WIELDERS OF WHIPS.

The dog-drivers amuse the spectators, though with a game of their own. They are as expert with their long whips as cowboys with their lassos. They can stand 20 feet from a coin and whip it out of the ground at a stroke. Visitors stick pennies in the earth and watch them by the hour strike the coppers out. The long lash is lifted back with the curl of a serpent and then descends straight on the coin with a thunderous crack. There is a little cloud of dust, the flight of a lump or two of earth and the penny is sailing in the air.

One day, all these simple folks will be laid to rest under such a pile of stones as stands in the centre of the village. It is an Eskimo grave. The rocks were brought from Labrador and heaped just as they are there. The dead are laid out on the snow, and simply covered with these funeral piles. No prowling wolf can ever then interrupt the sleep of their endless winter slumber.

Origin of the Trouble.

Why France is Trying to Bully the Siamese Into Giving Up Much of Their Territory.

Harper's Weekly. The trouble between France and Siam dates back a good many years, in fact, to the beginning of the French occupation and "protectorate" of Annam. The art and mystery of the surveyor are not much esteemed or practiced in the international affairs of Asia, but Annam under native rule has always been practically and conveniently bounded by the ocean on the east, and on the west by the mountains, to the westward of these, again, lies the valley of the Me-Kong. This valley has for 60 years not been disputed to be Siamese. As the London Times has lately pointed out, it is recognized to be so in the standard French atlas of the edition of 1885.

But the "instinct of expansion" by annexation, which was somewhat repressed after the lamentable events of the Tonquin expedition, had reassured itself in France and was the claim in a speech of M. Ribot, delivered two years ago, on the part of France as the successor to the rights and possessions of Annam, to all this territory between the river and the mountains—a territory actually much larger than Annam itself. The historical basis of the Annamese claim, now become French, is not at all clear. France is so much stronger than Siam that French statesmen have not taken too much trouble about its justification. In fact, it is even admitted that the French claim is in part the rectification of the "mistake" that France made in 1868, when she expressly recognized the sovereignty of Siam over the provinces of Angkor and Battambang.

Having put forward her claim, France proceeded to make it good, not by proposing a boundary commission, but by expelling the "invaders" from Annamese soil, now become French, and the Siamese de facto. Naturally this wounded the susceptibilities of the Siamese, and they in turn wounded the honor of France by killing some 15 Annamese soldiers in French uniforms. Finally, last spring, a French official, M. Groscurin, who was engaged in "escorting," or more plainly, expelling a Siamese mandarin from the territory in dispute, was killed by the mandarin. This homicide, it may be said, was a great windfall to the French "Jingo." It naturally produced great popular excitement, which was reflected in the action of the government. Three French men-of-war, the Forfait, Inconstant and Comete, under the command of Admiral Human, were dispatched to Bangkok to support the French demands. Troops have been dispatched also not only from the French possessions in Asia, but from Algeria, to back up the fleet. In fact, the French show of ultimatum, which was announced in Paris on the 18th, demands the payment of $400,000 by way of indemnity for the killing of M. Groscurin and of the Annamese soldiers in the French service, the surrender by Siam of the coast region between the mountains and the river, the immediate retirement of the Siamese not only from this region, which France claims as the successor of Annam, but from the provinces Angkor and Battambang, which she claims as the successor of Campodia, and the delivery to France, as guarantees of the satisfaction of the French demands, of $600,000 more or the assignment of the lakes till the amount is paid up. Forty-eight hours only were allowed the Siamese for deliberation on these requirements. Meanwhile the French men-of-war lay before Bangkok with steam up, ready for action.

The helplessness of the Siamese before such an army is so evident to themselves that the king is reported to be making ready to leave the capital. If France has nobody to reckon with but Siam she will of course make good all her claims. Of the justice, decency and regard for the opinion of the world which these claims show the foregoing recital will enable readers to judge for themselves.

Fire Will Not Destroy It.

Asbestos is a mineral fiber of the hornblende variety. It derives its name from a Greek word which signifies "inextinguishable by fire." The ancients were familiar with its uses and the modes of obtaining it, yet strange to say always alluded to it as a vegetable production. It was always used in all their funeral rites, but particularly where cremation was practiced, the corpse being wrapped in an asbestos cloth so as to keep the ashes of the dead person from mingling with those of wood or other combustibles used in incineration of the remains. The people of Egypt and many other countries of ancient times, especially the royal and wealthy classes, made towels, napkins, tablecloths, etc., of asbestos and cleaned them by throwing them into the fire.—St. Louis Republic.

Loneliness of the Pacific.

Four-Thousand-Mile Trips May Be Made Without Seeing a Sail.

Washington Star.

I notice an item in the press stating that the City of Peking, in her recent trip, sailed 1,240 miles without meeting a single sail, and this fact is cited as showing the loneliness of the Pacific Ocean. In the summer of 1850 I left San Francisco on a sail vessel (formerly from Baltimore for Panama, distant 4,000 miles, and on the entire route, which lasted 43 days, we never saw a sail! Loneliness is no word for it, especially when we lay becalmed in the tropics, with our vessel floating as helplessly about as a chip on a mill pond, the ground swell keeping up the monotonous roll of the vessel from side to side all day and night, and day after day, each roll being accompanied by a flap of the sails and the creaking of the rigging that might have passed for the flap of the wings and the wail of lost spirits. When we read about Noah and his ark we are apt to think that he must have had rather a lonely time, but then he was out only 40 days, and besides, with all the animals, etc., on board, he had plenty to occupy his time and attention, and if he wanted amusement to while away the time he had only to start a sparring match between his monkeys and parrots. True, there is no report of any such proceedings on his part, but this is doubtless because there was no modern newspaper reporter on board. I tell you, a man cannot realize what he is up to until he has made some such trip, and if he wants to complete his education in that line he should preface it with a tramp of 2,000 miles over the mountains and across the deserts amid wolves and wild Indians, as thousands of 49ers did.

"The secret, perhaps," say a traveler, "of the sweet expression and habitual serenity of the Japanese word can be found in their freedom from small worries. The fashion of dress never varying saves the mind of wear on that subject. And the bareness of the house and simplicity of diet make housekeeping a mere bagatelle. Everything is exquisitely clean and easily kept so. There is no paint, no drapery, no crowd of little ornaments, no coming and going of the footmen, no dusty streets. And there is the peaceful feeling of living in rooms that can be turned into balconies and verandas at moment's notice, of having walls that slide away as freely as the scenes on the stage and let in all out of doors, or change the suites of rooms to the shape and size that the whim of the day or the hour requires."

—August 22 will be "poets day" at the Columbian Fair. "Somebody has calculated that about one man out of a million who tries to write poetry succeeds so it will not be a large showing of successful poets at the Fair upon the day set aside for them. The good poets are like the good Indians—most of them are dead. If, however, the men and women who consider themselves poets are allowed to take part in the celebration of "poets day" there will be a goodly showing of short haired women and long haired men, men whose genius is mostly apparent in the fringes around the bottom of their trousers and women whose genius is evidenced by the holes in their stockings.

The Russian Thistle.

Farmers have a new enemy to fight, the Russian thistle. A bulletin issued from the department of agriculture, Washington, reports that it is overrunning many thousand square miles of the best wheat sections of Minnesota and the Dakotas. Some alarming facts are given with regard to the loss it is already bringing to farmers in these states. Sheep are fond of it when young. Clean culture will subdue it on cultivated soil. A road machine properly handled will help to keep the roadsides free from it. The plant is annual. By permitting no seeds to ripen it can soon be exterminated. Make a vigorous war on this foreign foe.
