—The death of Mr. Thomas Mayes, which occurred at his home in Lewis town on the 14th inst., will be a matter of interest to many of our readers as he was born near Pottery Mills, this county, in 1820. He will be remembered as a Lewistown hotel keeper away back in the days when Centre county had no rail-roads and hauled much of its product to Lewistown for shipment.

—Centre Hall people are all worked up because the Reporter has led them to believe that the Potter township capitol is located over a great cavern rivaling in splendor the Mammoth caves of Kentucky, and of which Penns cave is only a small part. The Reporter says "James Lee, who lives just beyond the southern limits of town bored down 40 feet on the other day and struck valuable iron ore, at 68 feet he encountered a stream of water, at 68 feet he found a cave."

THE AWFUL CRIME OF A BRUTE FATHER.—This community was shocked, last Saturday, when the evidence of the most fiendish and incomprehensible cruelty of parents was brought to light in a little story and a half shack, located on the tack road to Pleasant Gap and about one mile east of Axe Mann. There the Bellefonte police found a nine year old boy in a condition that beggars description. He was naked, emaciated for want of food, battered, bleeding and maimed. The most horrible evidences of the brutal passions of parents, whose cruelty admits of no comparison, for brutes die for their young.

For nearly a year residents, in the vicinity of the home of Milton Harman, had been convinced that he was abusing his nine year old boy, but as he is a vindictive man they were afraid to reprimand him or report him to the authorities. It was a frequent occurrence for passers by to see the father knock the boy over with anything he could get his hands on and the continued bruised condition of the poor child's body told only too sad a tale of the awful abuse it received. The reason why all the spleen of the father was vented on this one child is said to be because it was born before his marriage to Mrs. Harman, who is supposed to have been a Gypsy.

The boy had been given to a man named Cyrus Spangler, of Lykens, Pa., who had adopted it, but upon the death of his wife he returned the child to its parents with the understanding that he was to provide for its clothing until it was of age. This was in October, 1892. Since that time the cruelty has been kept up. It found its culmination last Friday, when the case was reported to District Attorney Singer. He immediately took steps to investigate the matter and with officers from here went out to find out if there was any truth in the reports. Upon arriving at the house Harman told him that the boy had been sent back to Dauphin county and was not there. On returning to town, however, they received information to the effect that Harman had not been away from home and consequently could not have driven the child to Lewistown to take the train, as he alleged to the officers, who then concluded that it was either dead or concealed somewhere.

THE ARREST.
A warrant was procured for the arrest of the parents and armed with the same officers Montgomery, Gares and Foulk went back on Saturday morning. Upon their arrival Harman, who was at work in his blacksmith shop, claimed that his wife was away visiting and that there was no one in the house, but the officers heard a noise inside and after gaining an entrance the warrant was read to the man and woman and the search began.

The sight that met the eyes of the police was one not soon to be forgotten. Filth and stench of intolerable kinds made their duty a hard one to perform. There isn't a single chair in the house, a three legged stool comes nearest to it. Old boxes are used to sit on and the other furnishing of the downstairs room was a rusty stove, a dirty cradle with a straw tick in the bottom of it, on which a six months old babe rested without pillow or covering, a broken down bedstead, part of a sink and an old rack of a bureau, all bespattered with grease and filth. These were the comforts of that home. Under the bed was the oldest child, a boy, vainly hissing the family dog to attack the officers.

THE BOY FOUND.
The man and woman having been secured they were forced to divulge the whereabouts of the boy. She directed the searchers to an upstairs room. They could hardly ascend the steps for the foul odor that seemed to emanate from all quarters and when the landing was reached they saw nothing but the rags and bits of harness scattered about over the floor. Through the half open door they saw two beds in the next room and directed their search in that one. There upon one of the dirty beds, with nothing to cover his nakedness but the tattered remnant of a cotton shirt, lay the child, more dead than alive, both hands tied to his back and in a condition which were we to tell you of it you would turn from this column in revolt. The child looked half starved and on a stand by the bed was a crust of bread smeared with molasses, but just far enough away that it was out of reach.

BROUGHT TO JAIL.
The police were afraid to move it at first but Dr. Hoy assured them that there would be no more danger in bringing it to Bellefonte than in leaving it there in the filth, so father, mother, the four children, who were all nearly naked and so dirty that their color, whether black or white, could be told, and officers were all loaded into a wagon and brought to jail. The four little children could not be left at home because they were too young so they were taken to jail with the parents and staid there until Monday morning, when the poor overseers of Spring township took them away.

The hearing was held before Justice Linn, on Saturday afternoon, and the child was the only evidence needed to commit the fiends for trial. The case was to have come up at this term of court, but the condition of the boy would not admit of his appearance at court and the case was postponed until the April term.

THE BOY'S CONDITION.

When put in evidence at the hearing little George Harman presented a deplorable condition. Covered from head to foot with a scurvy coating he looked as though he had not been washed for years. In his matted, unkempt hair vermin had made a nest for dear knows how long. Sores, some of them festering, others clotted with dry blood, were covering every portion of his body and limbs. His face was battered and scarred, a portion of his upper lip gone and his front teeth all knocked loose; the lobe of his left ear had been cut off last fall by a corn knife, thrown at him by his raging father. His arms and body were one perfect mass of sores, some of them as large as the bottom of a tin cup, others smaller, but the strange white appearance of these sores led to the conclusion that the child has very little blood in its body, for when washed off the wounds were perfectly white. The legs seemed battered to an unrecognizable mass of semi-rotten flesh. The left one is festering all along and both knees are swollen to twice their natural size, but it remained for the left groin to disclose the most hellish of all the brutality that the child must have suffered, for where the left leg joins the body it was rent and torn as if some monster had tried to tear the child limb from limb. In truth the whole sight would move the strongest heart to tears of compassion for that suffering and maimed little creature, who seemed to bear it all with patience, but alas, it seemed more because of fear of worse treatment if he should cry out. It would have taken but a spark to kindle the furor of those who witnessed the scene to that point when the lives of Harman and his wife would have been taken by the angry mob. Indeed the was much talk of lynching and had there been a leader there would have been hundreds to follow and drag them from the jail to any torment that could have been devised.

Little George Harman was a bright well clothed boy when he returned from Lykens and he regularly attended the Axe Mann school. His teacher, Miss Jennie Twitmyer, considered him a bright child and said he was very courteous and well behaved, but as time went on his clothes became ragged and he began to look stupid and pinched. He would go to school in the morning and not return home for dinner, though he carried none with him. His half naked condition told only too plainly that the money Mr. Spangler was sending him for clothing, from Lykens, was being used for other purposes and oft times his teacher would share her dinner with the wretched, half starved child. This went on for a few weeks then he did not return to school any more.

It is said that Dr. Emerick, of Centre Hall, was in attendance upon the family and we can't conceive why he didn't report the case long ago, since he must have known of it.

ILLITERATE PARENTS.

Harman and his wife were frightful looking; things when taken to jail, as were the other children. None of them had enough clothing to cover their nakedness and dirty was no name for the condition they were in. Sheriff Condo made them all wash and then burned their clothes which were alive with vermin and gave them clean ones to put on, and when once washed up they did not look so repulsive.

Both parents are of German extraction. Harman being 28 years of age, was born in Berrysburg, Pa. He is a big strong man, a blacksmith by trade and has lived at Paddy mountain tunnel, where he worked on a lumber job for Meek & Naugle, Linden Hall, and lately near the home of Joseph Ross near Pleasant Gap. Recently he had been working at one of the Valentine Iron Co.'s, mines and though industrious he was apparently always poverty stricken. This was perhaps caused by the slovenly wife, whose name was Mary Yount, before marriage, and whose chief accomplishment is to smoke a dirty black pipe. About the premises can be seen six pet rabbits, some chickens, a dog and two skeletons that pass for a horse and heifer respectively.

Both Harman and his wife are alike to blame for the child's condition as it implicates them both. It is now being comfortably cared for at the Almshouse, where thousands of people have visited it since Saturday.

BELLEFONTE BIDDING FOR A STREET CAR MANUFACTORY.—For several weeks there had been talk of the possible location of a large manufacturing industry at this place, one that would employ several hundred skilled operatives, but the nature of which could not be found out until last Monday night, when a special meeting of the Board of Trade was convened in the Court house to take action towards holding out inducements which it was thought would procure the Lamokin Street Car Manufacturing Company for Bellefonte.

The history of the movement to secure the location of this industry at this place is about as follows: At the term of last November court, when the case of Philip Collins vs. the Bellefonte Central Railroad was on trial a Mr. Cochran, of Chester, was subpoenaed as a witness. It was his first visit to Bellefonte and while he was not busy in court he took time to look about the town and of course was struck with its superior location as a manufacturing centre. He inquired as to the prices of lumber, coal and iron here, and when he made known the fact that he was the manager of the Lamokin Electric Street Car Mfg. Co. of Chester, his inquiries were cheerfully answered. At the same time it became known that his company was looking around for a new location, because the one it now occupies is too small for its business and exceedingly unhealthful, since it is in a malarial district. He was driven about the town and many desirable sites were shown, but the one that pleased him most was the old car shops. There he found plenty of buildings, plenty of room and unsurpassed water supply. So well pleased was he with the site that he returned to Chester and brought several of the Directors of company here to look at it. They were likewise favorably impressed and in order to come to some conclusion they asked what our people would do in the event of their locating here.

At the Board of Trade meeting Monday evening General Beaver gave the following resume of the situation. He stated that the Lamokin Co. is at present doing business near Chester, with stock and appliances valued at $134,000; it manufactures electric street cars and has a monopoly of the business by virtue of a number of patents which it holds on motor trucks and car construction; its present quarters are too small and it must move to a place where it can keep up with its orders and manufacture at least sixty cars per month; it will increase its capital to $250,000 upon locating in a new quarter and will employ more than two hundred skilled operatives, mostly cabinet makers, iron workers, electricians and wood workers; it has orders ahead for a year and must be in operation by the first of March; it does not want to be boosted by our people, as it is a flourishing, well established business and needs no support outside of a desirable location, for it claims to be able to compete with the world.

Now the foregoing will give our readers an idea of what the Lamokin Electric Street Car Mfg. Co. is, and you cannot but come to the conclusion that it would be a most desirable industry for any community, for it will bring hundreds of men, who will be paid high salaries, into our midst and men of a high type of citizenship. Any of you who have ridden in a modern street car, know that only the finest kind of material and workmanship enter into their construction and inasmuch as the electric street railway business is merely in its infancy it will readily be seen that such an establishment, controlling undeniably valuable patents, will perhaps grow to an enormous size.

Does Bellefonte want it? that is the question. Already Lima, Ohio, has offered exemption from taxes for ten years, $10,000 cash bonus, free buildings and free grounds. Newark, with railroad facilities and location perhaps surpassing those of any other American city, has offered twelve acres of ground valued at $1000 per acre. Williamsport and Harrisburg have both offered sites and lastly, Bellefonte was promised very favorable consideration if it would refer the car shops dam, put a new floor in the erecting shops and erect an extra frame building and exempt the company from taxation for a period of five years, all of which was estimated and could be done for $5000, and the amount is now about raised.

This firm will not come here asking the people to take its stock nor help it in any way, because it intends buying the car shops plant, the owners of which, have made such a sacrifice in the price they offered it for, that they felt justified in asking our citizens to make the needed repairs required by the Co. None of the subscriptions are to be paid unless the Lamokin Co. actually purchases the shops and locates its plant here. It will be known very soon whether Bellefonte is to get the industry or not.

Manager Cochran is very favorable to Bellefonte for in it he says he recognizes superior advantages from the following stand points: healthful location, proximity and cheapness of iron, coal and wood, exceptional schools and magnificent water supply.

Get your work done here it will pay in the end.

—The civil service examination for clerks or carriers at the Bellefonte post-office will be held on Saturday, Feb. 10th, at eleven o'clock. Three applications for carriers, viz: James Dolan and S. E. Hepburn, of Bellefonte, and John Rowland, of Benore, are on the list, while Miss Carrie Atwood and Willis Woodring, of this place, and Thos. O. Lytle, of Loveville, are applicants for credentials for clerkship. The last day for filing applications was last Monday.

—The tenant house on the farm of M. P. Weaver, near Axe Mann, caught fire last Saturday evening and burned to the ground. It was occupied by William Dearth and family and as the children were in bed at the time they were rescued only after they had narrowly escaped burning. The house took fire in the garret, from a defective flue, and when the father was attracted up stairs by a strange crackling noise he was just in time to save his children, as the flames were already licking up the bed in which they were sleeping.

A SLICK SWINDLER WORKS TWO BELLEFONTE MERCHANTS.—On Tuesday of last week a fine looking stranger appeared in Bellefonte and expressed his desire to locate here. In his search for a desirable house he was directed to George T. Bush, who gladly took him out to the southern part of town and showed him a number of good houses in that locality. He selected one, that apparently suited him, and asked Mr. Bush to have some necessary repairs made. A carpenter was hunted up and the work begun at once.

With the house secured the stranger, who gave his name as Thomas Smith, asked to be taken to a hardware store where he could purchase a stove and some tinware. Mr. Bush took him to W. T. Twitmyer's store in the Arcade and there he selected a range and some kitchen utensils. He paid for them with a check for $62.00, on an Elmira, N. Y. bank. His bill was $54.00 and received the change in cash. Together with Mr. Twitmyer he took his purchases to the house and set the stove up to await his family's arrival. But they never came.

Mr. Twitmyer returned to his place of business and sent the check to bank to have it entered to his credit, but alas, on Thursday it came back from Elmira with the information that no such man as he who had signed that check had an account at that bank. Of course Messrs Twitmyer and Bush kept quiet about the way they were fleeced, but it leaked out when chief of police, H. H. Montgomery, on Thursday, received a letter from J. C. Culp, a Milton hardware man, warning him to be on the lookout for a stranger who had tried, unsuccessfully, to work that town.

Smith played a good game and succeeded in duping our merchants.
