Washington Monument.

Marion Crawford Thinks It One of the Most Impressive Objects in the World.

Marion Crawford reads a lecture to those unpatriotic Americans who decry the city of Washington and its society, in an article which he contributes to the August number of The Century. He himself, fresh from all the charms of the Old World, admires the city im-mensely. He writes of "Washington as a Spectacle," and A. Castaigne draws some characteristic pictures to accompany the article. As to the much discussed Washington monument, Mr. Crawford says:

A famous living sculptor of ours has given us his opinion in condemnation of the Washington monument. It is sometimes called the Obelisk, for the comparatively simple reason that it is one, just as "they called him Peter, people said, because it was his name."
With all due respect to the sculptor's right of judgment, which is unquestioned, we may differ with him, and yet not brand ourselves barbarians. To the present writer it seems not too much to say that in certain light the Obelisk is the most imposing simple object of great dimensions in the whole world. Doubtless when seen, as it always can be seen by day, from a distance of two or three miles and from different parts of the city, cut of by a line of modern roofs across a pale sky, there is nothing remarkable or beautiful about it. It is then but the top of an obelisk, and nothing more; a slender straight line of stone visible in an it can hardly be said to be offensive, for it is too simple to offend.

Go to it at evening, when the sunset lights have faded and the full moon is rising. It is impossible not to see its beauty then. For some reason not immediately apparent the white light is not reflected from the lower half of it horizon. The lines are all there, but the shaft is only a soft shadow below, gradually growing clearer as it rises, and ending in a blaze of silver against the dark sky. The enormous proportions are touched then with a profound mystery; the solidity of the symbol disappears, the greatness of the thought remains, the unending vastness of the idea is overwhelming. Block upon block, line by line, it was built up with granite from many States, a union of many into one simple whole, a true symbol of what we Americans are trying to make of ourselves, of our country, and of our beliefs. There is the solid foundation, proved and tried, which we known of and trust in. There is the dark and shadowy present, through which the grand straight lines are felt rather than seen. And there. high in the still air, points the gleaming future, perfect at all points, bright at all points, lofty as all but heaven itself. There is the symbol. We may ask of ourselves whether we are to overtake the shadows and reach the light, we or our children, or our children's children; or whether the halfdarkness will creep up with us always, and with them, for ages to come, and even to the end. The Obelisk is beautiful not only by moonlight, as any one may see who will take the trouble to look at it with eyes human rather than critical-at evening, for instance, from the terrace of the Capitol, when all the world is breakers and the purple wash of night's rising tide; or at early morning, when the darkness sinks back, and the first blush of day warms the pinnacle of the lonely shaft-as though it had stabbed night in the sky and drawn the sweet blood of daylight upon its point. Most notably is it beautiful at such times when seen with the whole city from the great military cemetery on the heights of Arlington, than which few points in the world command a more lovely view. There in the quiet earth the solemn dead lie side by side, the many who fought for us when we were but their children, and who, for ours, will fight their immortal battles again in the clouds like the warriors of old. Many of us have heroes of our own name and race lying there in the broad treehemmed meadows, and among the flowers, and in that chosen rank where the great generals lie, as they fought in the forefront of the enemy, facing now not enemies but friends, the deep sweet valley with the quiet river at their feet. And far away, beside the airy dome of the Capitol, the single shaft rises sunward, and tells in sha dow-time for us, the living, the hours of the dead men's endless day.

Artists's Models.

"There is more nonsense written about models and the art of posing than any one can imagine," said an artist of reputation recently. "The fact is nature has to make the model, and the artist does the rest. If the model is strong and able to stand in certain positions longer than others, she has just that much more value. It is her beauty, her looks and her figure that make her desirable as a model, and the question of her posing is one that practice can settle. The best ones get 50 cents an hour, but they do not pose more than five or six hours daily. There is no much poetry in the model question."-There is not New York Commercial Advertiser.

-When you have a "touch of liver" don't take one of the ordinary liver pills, of which there are a dozen kinds in every store, but ask C. M. He will give you two medicines, one of which cleans out the system and re-moves all the secreted bile, while the other purifies the blood, restores strength builds up the appetite and makes you feel like a new person. Only 25 cents for both—Sample dose free.

-It is the duty of everyone whether at home or traveling for pleasure or business, to equip himself with remedies which will keep up strength and prevent illness, and cure such ills as are liable to come upon all in everyday life. For instance, Hood's Saisaparilla as a general tonic, and to keep the blood pure and less liable to absorb the germs of disease, will be well nigh invaluable. Change of drinking water often causes serious trouble, especially if one has been used to spring water in the country. From a few drops to a teaspoonful of Hood's Sarsaparilla in a tumbler of water will prevent the water having an injurious effect.

Hood's Vegetable Pills, as a cathartic, cause no disturbance, no loss of sleep, but assist the digestive organs, so that satisfactory results are effected in a perfectly natural and regular manner.

WHITE LEAD AS A PRESERVATIVE. -The advantages of using genuine white lead for painting surfaces, especially iron work, have been known for years, but an instance mentioned by Sir William Arrol will serve to impress the fact on the memory. Some years ago he purchased the materials of old Hammersmith Bridge for the purpose of using a portion in erecting a temporary plant at one of his large undertakings. The iron work had been in position sixty-two years, and many of the parts, owing to inaccessibility, had not been painted since they were placed in position. Finding them in so remarkable a state of preservation Sir William Arrol had some of the paint analyzed, when it was found to be genuine white lead .-English Mechanic.
