

Bellefonte, Pa., Jan. 18, 1895.

Governor Hastings Inaugural Address. Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Repre sentatives and Fellow Citizens:

Our Constitution requires that the Chief Executive of the Commonwealth, "shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed." Having been entrusted by the people of Pennsylvania with the administration of that office for the next four years, I have in your presence taken upon myself the prescribed oath of office. Profoundly impressed with the responsibility of the new relation which I sustain to all the people of the Commonwealth, I ask Supreme Ruler for all strength and guid-

Not unmindful of the unprecedented vote of confidence given by the electors, I should be guilty of insincerity if I did not now express my great appreciation of the unusual honor and I should be lacking in the qualities that belong to manly gratitude if this did not strengthen every purpose of mind and heart to the end that the confidence prove not to be misplaced. At the same time I fully recognize the truth that honest differences of judgment on public questions and candidates constitute one of the essential safeguards of free government, and demand of the successful competitor that unqualified recognition of the constitutional and legal rights of every citizen which is above partizanship.

The recent election disclosed on the part of the electors a gratifying and unusual desire for the intelligent discussion and determination of principles and issues, and a purpose to exclude from the campaign that element of personal abuse and vituperation which excites prejudice, inflames passion and misguides the judgment. The high standard set and maintained by the distinguished leader of the party opposed to my election, has demonstrated not only the feasibility, but also the wisdom of making elections record the public will, freed from all influences which pervert patriotic judgment.

The people of the state and of the country are now haprily emerging from a period of financial and industrial embarrassment which has wrought great injury and distress among all branches of industry and employment. Two political revolutions have taken place within two years that severely tested the stability of the form of government under which we live. From both, the country has come forth stronger and grander, and the people, with more confidence in the future of our political institutions. A great body of legislation which, during a constructive growth of thirty years has become almost a part of our organic system, was apparently overturned in the results of a single election. Two years later a far more emphatic and decisive revolution of public judgment restored the principle of American Protection. It may be safely declared, as a sequence, that the wage earning people of the United States, while willing that the contentions and competitions of supply and demand in this country may fix the wage-rate here, will never permit that wage-rate to be reduced by any legislation that involves competition from those who are not their political equal. While the American wage-rate is almost as distinctive a feature of our National system as our Declaration of Independence or our flag, and protection to our own industries a settled conviction of our people, yet conservative judgment will always demand that legislation upon this subject be of such a character as will be just to all sections of our common country, all indus. tries and occupations, and that with changing conditions, the schedules of protective rates shall be so modified as to prevent monopoly or oppression of any class of our people by the power of aggregated wealth.

I venture the opinion and the hope that, with returning confidence as to the future, we are gradually entering upon a period of encouraging and healthy business restoration. With this thought in view, the trend of our legislation should be in sympathy with every effort looking to the advancement of all the industrial, material and commercial interests within the border of the state.

The wage earning population of the state has, beyond doubt, suffered more by reason of the industrial conditions just mentioned, than any other portion of our people. They have been halted not only by reduced wages, but in many instances by absence of opportunity to earn any wages. It cannot be denied that the hand of toil, applied to her native stores of wealth, has done more to make our Commonwealth the Keystone of the Fedreal Arch, than even her commanding geographical position. Pennsylvania is the distinctive industrial Commonwealth. Her wage earners should receive fostering care in every legislative enactment affecting their interests. Benjamin Franklin declared that the proper care of intelligent labor is the noblest quality in statehood. The giving of fair and honest employment to labor is equally necessary and noble. Conflict between employer and employed is not only injurious to both, but hurtful to every related interest. The great energies and industries of the state are as necessary to labor as labor is to them. Both should be protected in their rights. Both should be given equal legislative opportunity. Labor arises from necessity more than from inclination, and is seldom inviting unless remunerative. Capital depends upon intellectual force and direction. A dollar is a conscienceless thing. Of itself it Green. earns no interest and declares no dividends, and is incapable of much good or harm. Its aggregated power, with intellectual force behind it, is incalculable for good or for evil. Its accumulation and use is the chief ambition and employment of mankind. The state that permits large aggregations of capital to be employed should surround the artificial person thus created with the same restrictions, privileges and protection, which it gives the individual citizen. The laws affecting each should be just and equitable. The burden taxation should rest ties, while I will constantly rely upon the justly and equitably upon both having due related interest. Neither should be a target for the demagogue or the tool of the avaricious. Wise laws rigidly enforced are indispensable to both as well as to the state. Every man has the right to sell his labor at his own price and is entitled to protection in its performance. Labor has the right to organize for mutual protection and advantage the same as capital; but neither labor nor capital has the right to combine to prevent men from working at any price they please, no more than capital has the right to control or pervert the natural channels of industry so as to depress the price of labor or raise the cost of living. I have been constrained to dwell somewhat in commonplace suggestion upon this subject, because in the further development of our material wealth, it is necessary for the peace and dignity of the state, and for the preservation of the lives and property of her citizens that there shall be no recurrence of law breaking methods to enforce a settlement of private disputes. The state is concerned that there shall be industrial peace; that mining, manufacturing, trade and commerce shall continue without interruption and to the advantage of all concerned; and I shall regard it as one of the most solemn obligations of my oath of office to see to it that the peace and dignity of the Commonwealth be and all other necessary outbuildings in good maintained and the laws enforced and open defiance thereto restrained promptly and at whatever needed cost,

While the question of the peaceful settlement of contentions between organized labor and capital is almost as old as organ- 39-50-3t. ized society, yet the subject is more important and momentous now than ever before. Recent experiences in this country indicate that public sentiment and matured judgment resulting from knowledge of the facts have uniformly been the best and most powerful arbiters of such disputes. But, public sentiment operates after the fact, and is rarely a preventive. If the general public could be fully iaformed of the facts and merits of the disputes that bring about strikes and infractions of law, before the parties reach a belligerent attitude, public sentiment would generally guide the way to peaceful and just settlement. The apparent legal obstacles confronting what is generally termed "compulsory arbitration," and the disinclination to voluntary arbitration, have rendered both comparatively ineffective in this country. Some sure legal method of ascertaining the facts and laying them bare to the public before disputes result in violation of law, destruction of property or injury to public rights, whether denominated conciliation or arbitration, would bring the merits of both sides of the contest before the public for its judgment, where the right is sure to prevail. The limits of this address prevent more than a mere suggestion upon the subject, but I may add that to maintain a sound and healthy public sentiment, so requisite to our form of government, care should be taken not only as to the moral and intellectual development of the rising generation, but that the patriotism and Americanism of our people should not be contaminated or weakened by infusions of populations not having the natural endowments, capacities, training or desires to become an honest, law abiding and useful part of our national economy.

When we consider that the general education of the people is essential to the stability and perpetuity of the state, we may well contemplate further improvements in our free school system. The ordinary township or village school, while filling a most useful place, does, to some extent, fail in affording the means necessary to enable boys and girls to fit themselves into useful places when every branch of employment seems to be already overcrowded. We are living in what is called an age of invention. Human labor has been abridged and human comfort enlarged by American ingenuity as applied to mechanical principles, and that to a greater and more profitable extent than in any other country or period of time. And yet the trend of free education has been such as to give very little prominence to industrito give very little prominence to industri-al training, to the education that prepares [15]. The account of B.F. Blatt and Fell B.F. Blatt and Fe the rising generation to earn a living by the joint use of head and hand. A large percentage of the patrons of our public schools go from the school house into the business of earning a livelihood. The province of the free school is and should be to assist them in preparing for whatever lawful employment inclination or necessity may bring to them. There is large de-
