A WANT.

I'm looking for some pretty girl, Of modest, quiet mien, Who dresses well, knows how to spell And has a wit that's keen.

That turns with every wind.

I think a blond would suit me best.
She must be swell, refined.

She must be constant as a star—
No meteor would do—
And, like her own sweet little self,
Her grammar must be true.

Vet more, if she would be with m (Excuse the slang) right "in it,"
She must be able to take down
One hundred words a minute.

of food. Most of the Mashukulumbe had never seen guns before, and the explorer thought he could keep them at arm's length until he had gotten out of the country. Then began a series of exciting events.

Dr. Holub, after days of negotiation, induced some of the natives to carry his party across the Luenga river. They were landed on what they supposed to be the further bank. Just as the last native was pushing off in his canoe it was discovered that the cunning savages had led them into a trap. They were en a swampy island in mid-stream. The river swarmed with crocodiles, and any attempt to swim ashore would have been almost certain death. Here the natives had intended to leave the white people to starve to death. Holub had just time to seize the solitary boat and est wonder of all was that an educated make the paddler a prisoner. To secure his release the boatmen came back and so the explorer was able to compel them | days of trial as well as the strong men to take his party to the further shore. The plight of the party was now hardly less deplorable than before. Twelve people had 70 loads of trade goods to carry and no one to carry them. All they could do was to build a fort of their 70 packages, kill game for food and wait in the desperate hope that some of the enemy would consent at last to carry the goods north to a place where porters might be obtained. Day and night the natives swarmed around the little fort, but if a gun was they were exhibited for one year by the raised above the breastwork they were Government in Vienna and Prague raised above the breastwork they were scared away.

A RUSE THAT FAILED

One day hundreds of natives approached without a weapon in their hands. They were very smiling and jolly, and sat down within a few rods of the whites, who did not know what to make of it all until they suddenly discovered that boys were skulking through the tall grasses, bringing big bundles of lances to the peaceful looking natives. A volley was fired over their heads, and the enemy, seeing that their trick was discovered, took to their heels.

At last one of the chiefs said he would supply carriers to take the goods further north. It was only a trick to get possession of the packages, for within a few miles half of the carriers had is the Hon. Davis Winne, of this town. run away with the goods they bore. His reputation is not confined alone to Holub was now in the territory of this county, where he held the office of another chief who was, if anything, more treacherous and wily than his royal bretheran. "I see," he politely remarked, "that you are tired, and that your brows are covered with sweat. See I have brought you here a calabash of milk : drink it all, it will refresh you."

Dr. Holub accepted the present with profuse thanks, though he observed that the milk had a suspiciously green appearance, and he told his party not to drink any of it. Some of it was, however, given to a dog, which died in a few minutes of convulsions. The party had had enough of Chief Njambo's hospitality, but they could not move the goods that were left to them without carriers.

GAVE UP THE TRIP.

Dr. Holub at last decided to go north with all his party except Mr. Oswald and two servants. These men were to stay behind to guard the goods and the doctor intended to return as soon as possible with carriers to take his property north. He started in the night and i was still early morning when he and his little band were overtaken by the two servants who had been left with Oswald. They brought the terrible news that the faithful white man had been killed by an assegai thrust and that the camp had been plundered.

Stealing back through the forest the party reached the scene of the tragedy. No natives were in sight. Poor Oswald's body was lying amid the ruin this year should teach the lesson that the natives had wrought. Every box had been opened and most of their contents had been carried away. All the cloth had been taken and only 300 cartridges were left. Nine of the note books filled with scientific information concerning the regions thus far traversed had been torn to pieces. In the ful to take dead quait out of the coundepths of Africa the little party, were ty in which they were killed. Missouri without any cloth to buy their way back to civilization, and they had only 300 cartridges with which to defend their lives and secure food during a journey that must last for months. BEGINNING A TERRIBLE JOURNEY.

They secured enough fragments of and luckily found intact the book containing the cartography of the north Zambesi tour, without which Dr. Holub would have found it difficult to write laws. Another winter must elapse bethe second volume devoted to this expedition. Then the little party began the terrible journey south that lasted eight signed to perpetuate the supply of quail months. They had a fight with the savages before they got away, but, fortunately, were not compelled to waste many of their cartridges. For 60 miles they had to avoid all settlements for every man's hand was against them. They had nothing to eat except what they killed. They could hardly urge their swollen and bloody feet through the forest. Dr. Holub's jacket was torn to pieces to bandage the wounded feet of his wife. If one member of the party paused for an instant all must pause in their tracks, for they dare not become separated. At night they usually built four fires, and within the space thus marked out they lay down to sleep. country, an incident occurred which suaded to take any other.

shows that the most humane and noble impulses may move even the benighted men of Africa to generous actions. Two natives who saw the sad plight of the worn out and nearly famished party to be United States Senator. went to Dr. Holub.

HELP CAME AT LAST "Your poor wife," they said to him, can travel no longer, and you are too weak to carry her. We will make a hammock and we will carry her. Then twenty-four hours longer. you can go more rapidly and soon get out of this land where everyone wants to kill you." "But," said Dr. Holub, "I have no cloth and nothing to pay you with."

"We care not for that," said the men. You are in trouble and we will carry your wife south to our country, where you will all be among friends. So they made a hammock, in which fear man no longer. It was February 11, 1887, when the little party, almost dead with fatigue, ragged and careworn, suddenly appeared in Kama's town, then the most northern outpost of civilization in South Africa. Word had been telegraphed all over the world that they had been killed in the hostile country, and their reappearance made a sensation in South Africa

It was thought little less than a miracle that they had lived through the perils they had faced north of the Zambesi and the terrible privations of ware eight months' retreat And the greatwhite woman, who had been tenderly nurtured in Europe, had stood those of the party, and survived hardships to which three of them had succumbed.

Although Dr. Holub lost so much in the Mashukulumbe country, all the great collections he had made south of the Zambesi were saved and added to the results of his first seven years' work in Africa. It cost him over $60,000 to mount all these collections, every dollar of which he raised by lecturing in his native land. Some idea of their quality

Some idea of their quality 39-39-tf may be gained from the fact that when they occupied 150,000 square feet of space, and it required 87 freight cars to carry them. Dr. Holub has never consented to sell a dollar's worth of these specimens, which embrace every department of natural history, but he has now given away about three-fourths of the entire collections, and there are few of the large museums of the continent in which his work is not well represented. His countrymen are proud of his achievements, and they are giving him a hearty welcome in this country
