Good Roads.
 The question of good roads is one in which the people of this country are becoming deeply interested. More than twenty States have already passed new road laws, others are planning similar measures, and the last Congress made an appropriation, though small, for an investigation of the condition of roads throughout the country, and for the publication of information to assist the people in improving their highways. The question is one in which politics does not enter, and as the good results of the movement are seen in those States which are doing practical work, other communities will doubtless be prompted to follow their example.

Although the general system of road improvement has been entered upon in New York State, yet much has been accomplished in Staten Island and Queens county in the construction of fine macadamized roads. In New Jersey a great has been done in the matter of road betterment, and the work is to be carried much further immediately. Not only are roads to be macadamized, but the grades are to be improved. This means that the improvement will not merely be to the advantage of those who ride in carriages or on bicycles, but that heavier loads can be carried by farmers and all others engaged in transportation.

Three years ago the movement for good roads took tangible form in Massachusetts. A temporary commission was then appointed to prepare a scheme of highway improvement, and in 1894 the commission was made permanent. An appropriation of $800,000 was voted to the commission to build State highways, and it has been divided among fourteen counties. The plan is to build, section by section, such roads as will connect the great centres of trade, and join with local roads in other States, so that both local and interstate communication will be benefited. The object lesson afforded by the work of construction of sections of State highways has not been lost on the people. A number of towns have already appropriated money to build their streets in the same manner as those constructed by the State, and others have secured road machinery with the purpose of extending the work on roads other than State highways.

In places where the traffic was of sufficient importance to warrant it, the roads have been broadened and the advantage to owners from the construction of the way is, as a rule, so much greater than the injury to them by widening the road, that in a large majority of cases the town officials have been able to procure the towns without any cost. The movement has now advanced so far, in its practical development, that the matter of maintaining sidewalks and shade trees on the highways is coming to the front, and it would be hard to estimate the value of the results that are likely to accrue from this practical reform.

Trade In Slaves.
 It Flourishes in East and West Soudan and Central Africa.
 The extent of country wherein the slave trade flourishes comprises three extensive regions. These are East and West Soudan and the central plateau of Africa, including the shores of the principal lakes. Taken together, these three regions constitute more than half of the entire surface of Africa. Here are found the most fertile districts, which would undoubtedly be the most thickly populated were it not for the devastating inroads of the slave traders.

The number of victims who are yearly kidnapped and sold into captivity naturally varies according to the season, the different regions of operation, and also to the occasionally imperfect means of raiding expeditions; but, taking an average of the most reliable estimates for the last few years, the figures representing the number of slaves exported to the markets for sale are: For West Soudan, 15,000; for East Soudan, 25,000, and for the central region, 40,000, making a total of 80,000 souls.

If one adds to this number that of the slaves who die on the journey by land and sea, and especially the large number of those who are slaughtered in the attacks on the villages, and those who die in the end from ill-treatment and privation—these later in the aggregate being as five to one of the preceding category—it may be reckoned that North and Central Africa loses yearly a minimum of 400,000 of its native population. It is not surprising, therefore, that provinces as extensive as some of the biggest European kingdoms, and which were once cultivated and prosperous in primitive fashion, have returned to their pristine condition as savannas and virgin forests.

The majority of captured negroes—men, women and children—although exported to long distances, do not go beyond the African coast; but enforced labor, domestic service, the harems, inter-racial conflicts and wars, human sacrifices and cannibalism, destroy thousands of them. The minority only, especially those who are captured after being hunted down by the Arabs, constitute the "black stock" of the export trade.

A portion of the captured negroes are sent to the Musulman States, on the African seaboard, and to the oases of the Sahara. Others are sent to the Musulman States of Asia and to the islands in the Indian Ocean.

Break a Bad Temper.
 Anger gets more people into trouble than meanness. We do and say things while in a temper that we spend the rest of our lives regretting. Parents should never punish their children while in anger, for if they do the child invariably gets more than it deserves. Wait till you cool down before you whip or shut up in dark closets. Then, too, if it is the child that has a temper and not yourself break it before the age of six is reached, for if you don't then that child's temper is likely never to be conquered.

She Knew What to Say.
 Because, Forsooth, Antonius Was Not the Only Husband She Had Managed.
 "Oh, what a perfectly adorable diamond pin!" cried the young woman with the violet bonnet.
 "Yes, and my husband gave it to me of his own accord," replied the young woman with the black gown.
 "You mean he thought he did."
 "I mean nothing of the kind. I'll die if I don't tell somebody, and it might just as well be you as anybody else, but don't tell your husband."
 "I won't. I'll let him think your husband gave it to you out of pure generosity—he hates to have anybody get ahead of him."
 "I know. Well, my new gown came home a ruin, an absolute wreck, and to tell the truth, I took most of my rage out on Antonius, because I wasn't afraid of him and I was of her. A day or two later his new suit came home from the tailor's. It was a perfect fit, except the coat sleeves were half an inch too long. I told him that it didn't really matter much, for they could easily be shortened. He replied that he wasn't afraid of his tailor if I was of my dressmaker."
 "Humph! He would be if his tailor was a woman."
 "M'hm. He said he would go right down and give him a piece of his mind—that he'd tell him he wasn't fit to make a pair of bicycle bloomers. Indeed he used such awful language that I was really alarmed. That made him more ferocious yet, and I trembled for the consequences."
 "Oh, well, you know that it takes nine tailors to make a man."
 "So Antonius remarked. I tried to calm him by reminding him that the poor man was probably a weak, nervous creature with a large family depending upon him, but he refused to listen and rushed off."
 "Then he sent a messenger with the coat and a polite note saying the sleeves were too long?"
 "Nothing of the kind. He came back in a cab an hour or so later, with his overcoat torn, a piece of court plaster on his cheek and oh such an eye!"
 "How cross he must have been!"
 "Oh, not so much as you might imagine. I didn't lose my presence of mind. I just cried, 'Antonius Bittersweet, I hope you didn't quite kill that poor tailor!'"
 "And he got you the pin the first day his eye was fit for him to go out? Well, I'm sure you are a remarkable woman."
 "Oh, well, not as remarkable as you might think," modestly replied the young woman with the black silk gown. "You must remember that Antonius is my second husband."—Chicago Tribune.

Two of a Kind.
 And the Woman Across the Aisle Knew Them Like a Book.
 He was an oldish man with a good natured face and a weed on his hat, and he sat down in a Baker street car beside another oldish man with a good natured face and a weed on his hat. They looked up at each other and smiled, and the first-come queried:
 "Wife, I take it?"
 "Yes, and you?"
 "The same."
 "Bad, isn't it?"
 "Very bad."
 "But time—"
 "Time is a great healer."
 "And in due time both of us—"
 And he winked.
 And the other man winked.
 And a woman across the aisle, with a faint show of mourning on, looked out of the window and sighed and said:
 "Yes, of course, the old reprobatess!"

Where Wealth is Despised.
 Fashionable Tailor—"Go front at once. Two young clerks there after suits."
 New Man (whispering)—"I'm waiting on a millionaire."
 Fashionable Tailor—"Leave him and attend to the clerks. These millionaires don't buy new clothes once in five years. A clerk is good for a fresh suit every three months."
 A Case of Just Conclusion.
 Teacher (with outline map)—"What country is this? Class—(Dense silence). Teacher—Come, can't any of you remember? It is the shape of a boot. Bright Boy—I remember now. It's Italy, the place where the bootblacks come from."
 Fainy Days of the Ruff.
 The huge ruff was brought from Italy to France by Catherine de Medici. It became so wide that spoons, with handles a foot long, were provided for ladies at dinner, so they could get their victuals to their mouths.
 The game of flower basket is only a little different from the old game fruit basket, which perhaps not all boys and girls have heard of. In fruit basket each one chooses the name of fruit, in flower basket the name of a flower, no two being alike. Then one stands in the centre and calls some flower name three times quickly. The one who has the name must say it once before the leader has said it three times, or else stand in the centre. When fruit basket is played, if the word "fruit basket" is uttered by whoever is in the centre all change places, the leader trying to get a chair also. As there is one less chair than people, someone is always left to stand in the centre.
 Ex-President Harrison has retired from the active practice of his profession, as a leader of the Indians bar, but is in full practice as a presidential aspirant. It is generally conceded that he is as much a candidate for the presidential nomination as Reed McKinley or Allison, and that he will be a formidable factor in the convention of next year. If it is written in the book of fate that a Republican is to be elected, Harrison is the best of the lot of announced candidates.

May Qualify Each Other.
 The bill to authorize school directors in the various school districts of this commonwealth to qualify each other before entering upon the duties of their offices and to certify the same, which passed the house yesterday, provides that it shall be lawful for school directors in the various school districts in this commonwealth to qualify each other by oath or affirmation that they will faithfully discharge the duties of said office and that they be authorized to certify the same to the proper authorities. In the organization of a school board it shall be the duty of the person chosen to act as secretary to qualify the person chosen to act as president, and the president in turn shall qualify all the other members of said board.

Persons who sympathize with the afflicted will rejoice with D. E. Carr of 1235 Harrison street, Kansas City. He is an old sufferer from inflammatory rheumatism, but has not heretofore been troubled in this climate. Last winter he went up into Wisconsin, and in consequence had another attack. "It came upon me again very acute and severe," he said. "My joints swell and became inflamed; sore to touch or almost to look at. Upon the urgent request of my mother-in-law I tried Chamberlain's Pain Balm to reduce the swelling and ease the pain, and to my agreeable surprise, it did both. I have used three fifty-cent bottles and believe it to be the finest thing for rheumatism, pains and swellings. For sale by P. P. Green, Druggist.
