A SIGH FOR REST.

My feet are wearied and my hands are tired,
My soul oppressed;
And with desire have I long desired
Rest—only rest.

'Tis hard to toil-when toil is almost rain, In barren ways.
'Tis hard to sow and never garner grain
In harvest days; The burden of my days is hard to bear,
But God knows best;
And I have prayed—but vain has been my prayer,
For rest—sweet rest.

'Tis hard to plant in Spring and never reap
'The Autumn yield;
'Tis hard to till, and when 'tis tilled, to weep
O'er fruitless field.
And so I cry a weak and human sigh
For rest—for rest.

My way has wound across the desert years. And cares infest
My path, and through the flowing of hot tears
I pine for rest.
Twas always so when still a child I laid
On mother's breast
My wearied little head—e'en then i prayed,
As now, for rest.

And I am restless still; 'twill soon be o'er; For down the west Life's sun is setting, and I see the shore Where I shall rest. -Father Ryan.

A French Hotel In Old Mexico.

Delights of a Restaurant at the Aguas Calientes -Local Customs and Cookery .- The Proprietor's Stock of Wines and Water Bottles-His Revolver Over the Bed's Head .- A Kitcher That Looked Like a Thieves Cabin -- Bed Rooms of a Mediaval Description.

The time-table declared, and the conductor affirmed, that a stop of half an hour was made a Aguas Calientes, the Hot Springs of Mexico, for dinner and I descended from the Pullman and looked around me at the great cobra-

The first figure which halted my eyes was a soldier, at least I took him to be a street, I began to understand why so soldier, as he stood in a corner half many boys loitered about the hotel, for, asleep and pacifically armed; his rusty revolver, and the form of his sword characterized him as a cavalry man. but as he was on foot he must have be The best, or company, room bore over longed to the infantry. Indeed, he the door the figure 13, but as there might have been an assassin waiting for his prey, but as I was traveling in good faith I called him a soldier.

Drawn-work and feather-work and the drink of the country (pulque) were offered here for sale, and while in examination of the exquisite center-pieces, doilies, handkerchiefs and menu cards up rushed a Mexican with dirty face and torn garments and in the sweet language of Cervantes informed me that my friends in the Rullman had sent for me to come to dinner at a French restaurant just within sight of the station, serfollowing him, I traversed a square or market place, past odd groups of ven-ders of strange tropical fruits with stranger odor. There were also sellers of oranges, limes, lemons and bananas, each sitting under huge umbrellas which sheltered them alike from rain or sun, and which were evidently essentially athing of the country, as they could never be shut and consisted of hung in some places in tatters.

The seats of some were painted blue, and of others red, whether an art fantasy of the aborigines of Aguas Calientes or a matter of first rested a half-burned tallow candle, a and second class customers, I never de-

I found myself finally in front of the eating house, a long building of no architecture whatever, and not higher in any place than three yards. It was without windows, and only a man of very ordinary height could enter. If one took it into his head to wear the high hat, a la mode, he would have to remove it in the open air or entrance was impossible for him.

The familiar faces of my Pullman car friends greeted me in the dining room, and a waiter met me who appear ed to be in a great hurry to seat me in a rude-looking chair with a broken, straw-bottomed seat. The surroundings were most primitive, the table rested on two crossed legs, and two badty hung doors conducted one to the bar, and one to the kitchen, it being necessary to lower the head in passing through eith-The room was entirely calcimined in white, with a broad freize of Pompelian blue under which ran narrow borders of blue and red painting; the walls were decorated with all kinds of American advertising cards. As my chair possessed uneven legs it rocked me wildly up and down in the intervals of I refused almost the entire dinner, but accepted two cups of very good coffee, in which I was glad to note that the sugar was quite white, and not like the bits of yellow marble common to most of Mexico.

The proprietor, seeing an advertisement of his house in the immediate future, was impatient to show it, so in his company I entered the bar or wine cellar first, where I found a goodly stock of wines. There were some Etruscanshaped water bottles, and two bottles which had once held the Queen brand of olive were now the depository of the proprietor's supply of butter. From his bar opened the host's bed room, which was without windows, and drawing aside the gay-colored blanket which hung in the doorway, I peoped in upon the clean bed with mattress of straw, linen sheets and pillow case and coverlet of purple wool, with a heavy revolver close to the occupant's head. A huge felt sombrero trimmed with silver hung upon the wall, while a square, wooden table held a wooden candlestick some broken bits of looking glass and a

When dried the dishes were placed upon an ancient bench, which in point of antiquity probably antedated the A great brazier of brick, Aztees. shaped like a butcher's block with an arc in front, cast into the darkness the cheerful red gleams of its charcoal fire, but it seemed to me that the cook was certainly fatter than any of the dishes that he served and would, of himself, have proved an excellent meal for a whole regiment of soldiers. Opposite to this charcoal furnace a small square door issued upon a terrace overlooking the patio, or courtyard, where several of a species of long-haired, wooly pigs, peculiar to Mexico, were quietly sleeping, seeming to me in their placid exposition of themselves a very trede-mark and provision store.

Viewed from the terrace inward, a most prominent object in the kitchen was an American stove, old and musty, which stood in a corner in complete repose as if it would say, "I am ashamed to give my civilized services in such a land," while the smoked walls were hung with bacon and haunches of ham, whose odor testified to their age. A dark windowless laundry also unclosed upon this entrance; it was full of soiled linen and servants were heating irons by bringing in small braziers alive with charcoal fires. Putting my head through a round hole in the wall, I found half of my body in the laundry and half in the restaurant, and leaving the pigs in silent guard of the dirty patic, I returned to the eating room, where a porter was awaiting me with a great mass of iron keys, each a foot in length, and weighing, at the least, two pounds apiece. At first sight they seemed to be the keys of St. Peter with which to enter Paradise, but instead like trees and the brown fields powdered they unclosed the bed rooms, all of which were upon the outside of the house, with doors opening upon the according to the keys which I saw, each guest would be obliged of necessity to employ a key bearer.

The floor was composed of red bricks, the ceiling of great beams of wood, with a small space, five inches wide, from one beam to another, which the industrious spiders were speedily covering with a silvery lace There was no carnet or bell work. and the furniture consisted of a single iron bed, painted red, with mattress of corn husks, a small chair of straw and a round table, which had known the varied uses of toilet, reading, writing outspread and covered with linen, which and smoking for a small, burnt piece of cigarette, probably a remnant of the occupant, laid upon the edge : also a very heavy, round iron candlestick and

The single bed did service for two when occasion demanded, which occasion was very rare. There was a little, long, round bolster upon it of incredible hardness, which might well have served as a battering-ram for the old Romans, two yellowish-white sheets with blue lines down the centre, but scrupulously clean, and a blanket of scrape, of bright stripes, which somehow reminded me of a crouched zebra. The room resembled a dungeon more than anything else, for there were no windows, and when the guest extinguished his candle he was surrounded by the blackness of darkness. Six Killed in a Cyclone.

A Jersey Hamlet is Practically Wiped Out of Existence .- New York Also Visited .- The Town of Wood Haven, on Long Island, Badly Devastated.—The Storm was the Fiercest Known in Northeast New Jersey for Years and the Destruction it Has Caused is Very Great. Trees Were Torn Up by the Roots, Large Buildings Unroofed and Many Lifted Entirely from their Foundations.

A cyclone swept across Hackensack N. J., July 13, leaving death and desolation in its path. At least five persons are known to have been killed, scores were injured and a large number of buildings were demolished. The storm first appeared at Cherry Hill, which was practically swept away, sixty houses being unroofed and a dozen more totally destroyed. The railroad station, on the New York and New Jersey Railroad, was lifted from its site and thrown across the track and wrecked.

THE KILLED AND INJURED.

The cyclone made a clean path by scores, many of them through the centre of the place. At the present time it is known that five were killed, and the injured are numbered, fatally. The dead are Conrad Friedman, three unknown Polish laborers and the Ahrens child.

The storm came from the northwest, headed by great banks of clouds and a stirring breeze. The atmosphere was warm for a time and then cold, and after a second rush of warmth came the cyclone, carrying death and destruction in its course. The storm centre was about 200 feet in width and the strip over which it passed is a mass of ruins. Not a building in its path was spared, and those that were not completely demolished were unroofed or moved from their foundations. Great masses of wreckage were carried through the air by the gale ladding to the destruction.

LONG ISLAND STORM-SWEPT. NEW YORK, July 13 .- The first cyclone in many years struck New York Saturday and resulted fatally in one instance, besides wrecking a large amount of valuable property.

The cyclone struck the upper end of East New York, known as Cyprese Hill, at halfpast 4 o'clock, continued on its way to the lower plains district, and from there traveled to Wood Haven, Long Island. One life was lost and the damage to property was great. A number of people were badly hurt. The cloud was first seen going over Cypress Hill Cemetery. It was funnel shaped and hung very low to the ground. At the upper end was a red spot that appeared more like an incandescent light than anything else. The cyclone swept over the cemetery, wrecking bandsome and costly monu-It tore down trees for two ments. hundred feet, and then turned into Jamaica avenue at Crescent street, up Jamacia avenue for half a mile. St. Petersburg, July 13 .- Prince Lobanoff Rostovski, the Russian Minister of Foreign Affairs, on Thursday requested Nishi Tokujuiro, the Japanese Minister to Russia, to state within what period the Japanese would evacuate the Liano-Tung Peninsula. The Minister replied that Japan would retain the territory in question until full payment of the war indemnity and compensation for the renouncing of Liano-Tung had been made by he Chinese Government. Prince Lo noff refused to accept this answer, and at once instructed the Russian Ambassador at Tokyo to ask the Government to name a date for the withdrawal of all the troops from the Chinese mainland.
