When Eugene Field wrote these lines he loomed so grandly on the theatrical horizon | practice. that when it suddenly disappeared there was a great void in the amusement' world. People missed genial Jack Haverly, with his Mastodon minstrels and his many magnificent enterprises.

In time they learned to do without him but they never forgot the minstrel king and for years they have been asking:

"What has become of Jack Haverly?" The question is answered at last, and answered in a manner that will give great gratification to the thousands of friends of the old time showman.

Jack Haverly is on his feet again. He has struck it rich in the mines of Colorado prosperity. A few weeks ago he was dead customed. To-day he is rich, an experience that is not new to him.

Few men, even in this land of speculators, have had such a varied career as J. H. Haverly. He started in life as a train- ful assistance to unfortunate humanity, boy on the Pennsylvania railroad, where he sold peanuts and newspapers and studied of condition for women and children is one

The minstrel business was not big enough for Jack Haverly. He branched out in theatrical enterprises. He acquired a large theater in Chicago, three of the leading theaters of New York came under his management, he leased opera houses in Philadelphia, San Francisco, Brooklyn and other cities. His name confronted you from every billboard. Probably you remember Haverly's Pinafore company that coined money in all the large cities of the country. It was quite as profitable as the minstrels while it lasted. Then he sent other Haverly companies on the road and conducted the transcontinental tours of Mapleson's Italian Opera company, at that time the greatest institution of the kind in the country. He estimated that from IS78 to 1880 he was worth $2,000,000.

At the zenith of his prosperity Jack Haverly announced that next season he would control 50 theaters. Next season he had no theaters at all. The bubble had burst, and the great amusement promoter disappeared from public view.

He invested largely in Colorado mining properties, and to these invery small sum, if any at all. The threat rado mining properties, and to these investments he attributed his downfall.

He had an abiding faith in them, however, and during his eclipse he went to Colorado to live, where he led a precarious existence. He felt sure that some of his mines would pan out, but he could not get any one to invest money in them, even during the first Cripple Creek craze.

When in the heyday of his prosperity he had purchased outright a plateau known as Bull Hill, nine miles west of Cripple Creek. A short time ago he appeared in Cripple Creek with his corduroy trousers tucked in his boots and a big cowboy hat pulled ernment was established the plain people down over his er s. Dr. Effie T. Straub

NORAH GRIDLEY.

The old adage, "Where there is a will there is a way," has been verified in the case of Dr. Effie T. Straub, one of Chicago's brightest, most practical and thoroughly conscientious women physicians.

In the year 1861 there was born in Bellefonte, Pa., a little girl who was destined to become a woman whose name and record would recall noble thoughts and kindly deeds. When but a mere child Dr. Straub expressed a desire to become a physician. As time sped along she realized the fact that a partially invalided mother demanded her assistance in the household, and as the days passed there seemed to be a stern necessity which forbade her departure from the old homestead; yet she consoled her-self with the thought of still attaining her heart's desire, and would often say to her friends that "If by the time I have reached my thirtieth year, the way has not opened I will then settle down to that which fate has in store for me."

Circumstances and conditions so sur-rounded her that she was forced out into the realm of labor. Dr. Straub mastered the science of stenography and was a special reporter for both county and daily pa-

The money which was earned in this way she laid aside, in part for the purpose of securing a college education. During this period of her life she completed the Chautauqua course by home reading.

In September of 1887, Dr. Straub came to Chicago, bringing an invalid friend for hospital treatment. Once there, and the home ties broken, she concluded to remain permanently and enter college. This she did, and by taking dictation out of hours, and by doing stenographic reports of lectures for both students and professors, she worked her way through Hannemam medical college in 1890, graduating one year before the limit set, receiving honorable mention in a class of one hundred and twenty. Beams kindly down upon you wheresoe'er your of which only nineteen were women. After her graduation Dr. Straub went to Riverside, Ill., where she took the prac-tice of Dr. Isabella Scott Hotchkiss during her absence in Europe, which covered a six months' sojourn. Gaining quite a wide experience, Dr. Straub then removed to Hyde Park, where her family joined her, remaining there until after the World's Fair.

Since the fall of 1895 Dr. Straub has been resident physican of the national temperance hospital and sanitarium of Chicaexpressed the feelings of a large body of the American people. Jack Haverly's star at the same time attended to her private

After two years or more of general practitioner's service, Dr. Straub intends to go to Vienna and perfect for the specialty of consulting obstetrition.

Looking forward to this, she is taking a post graduate course in the Allopathic school, and expects to receive her diploma from Harvey medical college in June.
Dr. Straub is a member of the American Institute of Homeopathy, and the Illinois Homeopathic medical society; also the Illinois Woman's Press association.

Dr. Straub's life has been so busy, so full of study, research and helpful labor, that she has little time for social functions, and once more rides on the top wave of and prefers communing with nature in the open air, taking her recreation in bicycle broke, a condition to which he was well ac- riding, of which she is an enthusiast, and considers it conducive to health and spirits. spending her vacations wheeling through the country. Dr. Straub's private life is one of help-

human nature. In 1861, at the age of 19 he drifted into minstrelsy in a small way. He was an excellent mimic and had a talent | which will in the future bring their own reward. She is an example of what courage, hope endeavor and persistent effort can accom-plish. As a child she prophesied the future. Her ultimatum was made a fact,

and before her thirtieth year, she had fulfilled the mandates of her prophecy. Dr. Straub is located in Chicago at the corner of Garfield avenue near Lincoln Park, where she finds her greatest pleasure in making a home for her aged parents and two younger sisters.—The Household Realm,

—It is vehemently urged by the gold standard advocates that the free coinage of silver will drive the yellow metal out of circulation. Considering how much gold is circulating these days this threat is seen to have but little weight. Ask the generality of men you see how much gold they have had during the past six months and they will inform you that it has been a very small sum, if any at all. The threat of driving out the yellow metal has, therefore, little significance. Nearly all the gold that is in the country is in the banks or in the United States treasury. It is certainly not in the channels of trade.
