FARM NOTES.

-The proper care of milk is considered so important a matter that the Department of Agriculture has issued a special bulletin (No. 42) on the subject, prepared by Dr. R. A, Pearson, in which, after giving much valuable information relating to the composition of milk, dairymen are reminded that milk is naturally a pure product, and if found unclean or disproportionate in its proper parts the causes are not due to the cow, but to the management. Milk may be contaminated on the farm, by the dealer or milkman and after delivery to the family or consumer 'by lack of cleanliness in handling it, by being placed where flies or dust can reach it, by being in a warm place or by being kept in an ill-ventilated cellar. Milk is also subject to rapid changes due to bacteria, which may cause it to become blue, bitter, slimy or ropy and sediment in milk should always be cause for suspicion of impurity, as particles of dirt indicate that germs are abundant, not over-looking the important fact that dirty milk may be dangerous as well as disgusting, as the dirt in milk consists mostly of particles of dead skin and manure, which full into the pail from the bedy of the cover during milking while body of the cow during milking, while dust in the stable, dust and dirt in the vessels for handling milk and unclean attendants are common sources of dirty sediment in milk. Milk from unhealthy cows, or that which has been handled by sick persons may contain germs of typhoid fepersons, may contain germs of typhoid fever, diphtheria, etc., and spread the disease. Any milk having an unnatural appearance should be discarded.

PRESERVING WITH HEAT AND COLD. The change to which milk is most liable is souring, and the best agents to prevent this are heat and cold. There should be no difficulty in keeping milk sweet at a temperature of 50 degrees if it is delivered in good condition, and it should keep for at least 24 hours. It should be cold when delivered and at once put in a cold place. In summer milk will sometimes become sour when no cause can be assigned, which perhaps may be traced to the refrigerator, as it may seem cold on account of the great difference between its temperature and that of the outside, while in fact it is not cold. Pasteurization of milk is a process of heating so as not to cook the milk yet destroy any germs that may be present. One or more bottles nearly full are plugged with dry absorbent cotton and placed in an upright vessel having a false bottom and containing enough water to rise above the milk in the bottles. The vessel is then heated until the water is 155 degrees in winter or 180 degrees in summer. It is then removed and kept lightly covered for an hour, a heavy cloth being thrown over it to retain the heat. The bottles are then cooled quickly and kept in a cool place. The cotton plugs should be kept dry and not removed until the milk is to be used. Milk so treated should keep 24 hours. In summer it may be necessary to bring the milk to the boiling point if special precautions against disease are deemed necessary.
MILKING AND HANDLING.

On a well-conducted diary farm the conditions should be perfect. The stable should be roomy, light, dry and well ven-tilated, and the cows must be comfortable in order to have them healthy at all times. The cows must also have access at least twice a day to pure water, and the food should be of the best quality, free from dirt, decay or a musty condition. The atmosphere of the stable should be pure and free from dirt when milking is done, and employes should carefully wipe the udders and wash their hands before milking and also be in clean clothes. The cows should stand on clean litter and not on dirty stuff which could be used nowhere else. The animals should be treated with kindness. Every dairy farm should be provided with utensils for washing and sterilizing milk and for straining, ærating and covering the milk (which should be done as soon as the milk is taken from the cows), the utensils to be washed thoroughly and scalded. The price of milk should depend upon its quality, that containing the larger proportion of fat being the more valuable, as it costs the farmer more to produce rich milk than poor, while the consumer will be better served. When farmers can satisfy their customers that the milk has been tested and graded according to fat contained, the milk in each can will be sold upon its merits, and the farmer will be paid according to the quality of his milk. Such a condition will surely lead to better breeds of stock, the destruction of diseased animals, greater confidence be-tween producer and consumer and larger profits to all classes connected with or dependent upon the dairy industry.

—The principal expense in whitewashing is for labor. The lime necessary to whitewash a large building costs but a nominal sum. As the winter season affords more opportunities for such work, everyone of the farm buildings should be white-washed, unless painted. Whitewash in the stables makes the conditions better, providing more light and rendering the interior more cheerful. Whitewash should be applied several times if necessary, and should be put on everything that can be improved in appearance by its use.

-Foot-rot is quite as contagious a disease as the scab, but it is not much considered as such. It is only on wet lands that it is severe, but by contagion it is liable to spread to the dryest pastures. It is as easily controlled as the scab, which by the requisite measures may be easily eradi When this is done on any farm or range all that remains is to be sure not to bring diseased sheep on the land to infect the flock.

—A practical dairyman states that he gained a quart of milk a day by feeding the meal or ground grain after giving hay to the cows, instead of before allowing the hay. He assigns as a reason that the grain is better and more completely digested if given after the cow has had her allowance of hay. He suggests that others try the experiment. No water is allowed until the hay is consumed.

—The fine grass of the hills is especially attractive to sheep, but the long-wool breeds are at home in the rich, level pastures, and do well if the soil is dry. They are not such rovers as the Merinos, but are content to fill up, lie down and fatten and let their wool grow. They make wool and mutton rapidly and profitably.

-Spread the onions on shelves in thin layers, and do not disturb them until they are wanted for use. Onions may freeze and thaw several times during the winter without injury if they are not handled.

-In Russia sunflowers are made special crops, the seed being ground and used for cattle, the same as cottonseed meal, and such food is not only wholesome, but gives excellent results in milk and butter.

Tortoise Shell.

The finest tortoise shell comes from the Indian archipelago, and is shipped from Singapore, and most of it is obtained on the Florida coast of America. There are three rows of plates on the back, called "blades" by the fishermen. In the central row are five plates, and in each of the others four plates, the latter containing the best material. Besides these there are 25 small plates round the edges of the shell, known as "feet" or "noses."
