poured from some great wash tub. It seems to be waiting for the traveler to get just in the right position then it will tumble down on him, but then it remains magnificently grand, just as it has been for ages, and moving so imperceptibly that did you not know better you might readily believe it to be a solid mountain. After you pass and get to a higher elevation, more on a level with it, the effect of the sun is indiscribable. The slanting rays seem to delve far into the great blue mountain of ice and emerge with every one a different color. Then they dance and shimmer on the surface in the most dazzling kaleidoscopic fantasies.

After arriving at Canyon City, 9 miles out of Dyea, the road strikes up through the canyon a distance of five miles to Sheep Camp. The canyon road is nothing more than the frozen bed of the river that turns and twists in the most tortuous fashion and is ever interrupted by such precipices as it seems impossible to climb with a loaded sled. At Sheep Camp the scene changes. Tents are seen everywhere and outfits are piled promiscuously about. Men are continually arriving or departing; some of them dragging small sleds with from 100 to 200 lbs. of freight, others are packing on their backs, while their more fortunate brothers have dog teams or horses. There is an air of good cheer about it all, but notwithstanding the attempt to make every burden appear as light as possible there is a grim determination to find gold or die in the attempt written on nearly every face you see.

From Sheep Camp to the Scales, which is at the foot of Chilcoot Pass, is three miles and everybody who can't afford the $2.00 per 100 lbs. packing charges has to get their own stuff to that point. Thence to the Summit another $2.00 per 100 lbs. charge is made for the one-half mile distance between the two places. Probably you will deem this charge exorbitant but in reality it is the smallest made thus far for that one-half mile means a climb right up the almost perpendicular side of them conntain to an elevation of 1 we will strike the Canadian revenue post that will require us to pay duty and see that every man who enters has at least 1,100 lbs. of provision, which is reckoned enough to last one year. The location of the Canadian custom house at this point has created con-siderable talk as it is supposed to be in dis-puted territory.

puted territory.

We have been having the best kind of luck and everyone says that this is the very best time of the year to get along. To-morrow we will start on the hard trail over the pass. I sime of the year to get along. To-morow we will start on the hard trail over the pass. It walked out a little while ago to take a look at the route that has suddenly become famous all over the word and as far up the pass of a further one the little black dots on the snow told me of some tolier on the way to the new Eldorado. There was a line of men and women, laboring along in single file, as far as the eye could see. Yes, there are a great many women her, but you could dires salike, some have families and some are alone, earrying their own supplies.

On Tuesday morning as Hugh L. Fry and his younger brother, Mac, were dismounting, a horse which was considered perfectly safe. at the school house, the horse turned suddenly and kicked in a playful manner striking Hugh in the face and causing an ugly wound. The back of his head was cut several places, where he fell onto a stone, and after he had been carried into Mr. Hartswick's Dr. Woods put several stitches in the right side of his face. He was taken home in the evening and is now getting along; nicely.
