

-Sulphur is injurious when given in food during damp weather to animals or poultry. For hens that are shedding their feathers it is beneficial if added to the food in small quantities twice a week. It is also excellent for hens that are laying.

The inner wood of a tree should not be exposed to the air or decay will set in. Paint or something should be used on scars to prevent such a disaster. No large wound should be let go uncovered. While true that the inner wood of a tree is dead, it can not decay when air is kept from it.

--Gooseberries are progagated to some extent by cutting, but generally by layers. The earth is heaped in a mound around the bushes and the young sprouts will strike roots. They should be planted in rows 4 by 4 on a rich, heavy soil, well cultivated and heavily pruned. The fruit grows on the buds formed on 2-year-old wood and on spurs and buds of older growth. Pruning should be directed to cutting back the new growth and occasionally cutting out extra shoots. Some cultivate in low tree form, but the shrub form is the more natural way of growing.-Denver Field and Farm.

-Carbolic salve should always be kept ready for use at the cow barn. Bruises and sores often occur in the best regulated establishment, and there is nothing really better than a carbolic ointment for such cases. This may be purchased already prepared at any drug store or the dairyman can easily prepare it for himself by simply taking some vaseline or even lard and adding to it a very small quantity of the acid. Two or three drops of carbolic acid would be sufficient for one tablespoonful of the vaseline or lard, only mix them thoroughly together. Such ointment is a rapid healer and keeps flies away from sores. It is excellent for man or beast .-- Practical Dairyman.

-It has been demonstrated that a cow will eat as much as seventy-five pounds of green food in one day. This appears as a large quantity, but such cows are also producers of more milk than cows which eat but litfrom which to produce the milk. Do not reduce the food because of a scarcity, but buy bran and linseed meal. Economy in the saving of food means a loss in the product. Food brought on the farm is not only an addition to the raw material to be utilized but increases the manure heap.

A cheap and simple remedy for smut in oats is to soak the seed in water heated to about 133 degrees F. for five or ten minutes. This treatment is said not only to kill the smut, but to hasten the germination of the oats and increase the yield to such an extent as more than to pay for the treatment. It is well to have two tubs, one containing water heated to 130 degrees and the other to about 140. Put the oats in a loose sack. Dip first in the cooler water for a minute or two, let drain for a minute, then dip in the other tub for from five to eight minutes. Turn and knead the sack to get the oats all wet thoroughly. Empty the oats on an airy floor and let dry water to dampen seven or eight bushels of seed. Stir thoroughly, drain and dry be-fore sowing — Burgel New Verlage fore sowing .- Rural New Yorker. -"Budding is usually done in August bark of the stock peels freely. The latter condition is attained quite early in the seacondition is attained quite early in the sea-son, but not the former. So we must wait until the right time arrives and these two conditions meet. The right time is whon it is sight time is whon the sight time is the sight time conditions meet. The right time is when the stock—the young trees or the branch of a tree which is to receive the bud—has begun to form its terminal buds, indicating that it is ripening its growth for the season." With the foregoing explanation The National Stockman gives directions for this important operation, which are in substance as follows : In performing the operation it is best to have a budding knife but successful work has been done with a good barlow. The requirements are a thin blade, with the point a little rounding and a very keen edge. A prepared "stick of buds" ready for work must be a shoot of the present season's growth. As soon as the scion is cut the leaves are to be removed, allowing a short piece of the foot stalk to remain-a third of an inch or so. A piece of the point of the shoot-two or three inches-is to be cut off and rejected, as several of the younger buds are usually too immature, and the same with two or three inches of the base of the shoot, the buds on this part being imperfectly developed. These sticks of buds are to be kept in damp cloth until used. The most convenient size of stock to be budded is half an inch or so in diameter. The best point at which to insert the bud in a young tree is two or three inches above the surface of the ground. Trees three or four years old or more would have to be budded in the branches. With the rounded point of the knife an upright incision of an inch or 1¹/₄ inches in length is made in the bark, and at the upper end of this incision a short horizontal one. An oblique incision, instead of the horizontal one, has this advantage, that the tying material will cross it instead of dropping into it, which it might do without proper care. which it might do without proper care. The bark is now to be raised gently, begin-ning at the upper end of the long incision. In doing this the long piece of bone or ivory on the lower end of the handle of the budding knife comes into play. The bark being raised on each side of the incision, a bud is to be cut from the pre-pared stick of buds. The knife should enter about half an inch below the bud and come out three quarters of an inch above it, taking a very thin slice of the wood along with the bud. The bud is now held by the short piece of footstalk and inserted under the raised bark, beginning at the upper end of the incision and pushing it down gently to the lower end. Should a portion of the upper end of the bud extend above the incision the protrucing portions is to be cut off so as to make a neat fit. Tying is now in order. The material may be narrow strips of muslin candlewick, woolen yarn (four or five threads together), linn bark or the imported raffia. Beginning at the lower

FOR AND ABOUT WOMEN. Mrs. Richard King, a widow, the daughter of a Presbyterian missionary to Texas, has landed estates in that State amounting to 1,250,000 acres, which probably make her richer than even Mrs. Hetty Green.

Most of the smartest of the new hats are toques shaped especially to perch comforta-bly on top of the pronounced "pompadour" and there is a decided preference for the toque that tilts directly up at the front.

The fancy waist will continue to be worn with plain skirts at the theatre, at concerts, etc., but the skirt, though plainer, will be of the same color. Where the whole gown is in evidence, as at a house gathering, the dress must be a creation entire-that is designed to be worn together and made en suite. The fancy colored waist and dark, plain skirt are not now fashionable, and always gave the wearer a cut-in-two-at-the waist look whenever she stood so as to bring the full figure into view. At a play, providing the wrap matched the skirt when the wearer was upon the street, the gay, different colored waist looked very well, but its use has been so terribly abused that fashion now says your skirt must look enough like the waist, even when sitting in the theatre, so that no difference shall be observable.

There are many radical changes in the autumn capes and coats. The cape comes in for first consideration, since it is the style of wrap pre-eminently suited to the first crisp days. Women who are stout and short of stature will undoubtedly feel a pang when they learn that the short chic cape is a thing of the past. Even the dres-sy little wraps designed for immediate use are either long in the back or long in the front. An importer who has just returned from abroad with the latest creations of Parisian wraps and London coats, when questioned about the styles, said : "Tell all womankind to get rid of the short cape and coat." The new capes have rounded fronts sloping gradually off to some depth at the back, according, of course, to the wearer's height. A short woman will find a comparatively short cape more becoming while tall, graceful figures affect the style that sweeps down almost to the hem of the skirt behind. Coats are to be worn very long also, and are cutaway in front after the fashion of the new capes. Fine cloth tle. It is of no advantage to have what is termed a "light feeder," as it is impossi-ble for a cow to yield milk in large quantities unless she consumes sufficient food are fashioned with an attached flounce of the goods, and many of the former have as many as three flounces.

> In duck and serge skirts the pockets are worn anywhere but on the hips and inside the front widths. Two square catch-alls, with flaps that button down, are frankly sewed on the front part of the skirt, with-in handy reach of the wearer's right and left hands, and into these she puts her belongings easily and comfortably. The promise of the tailors is that wool walking skirts for autumn and winter shall be made with the same regard for convenience and that none of these skirts shall have a gather or a pleat the whole waist band

One of the most prosperous farmers in Oklahoma is Mrs. Jane Crumm, who lives near Calumet. Four years ago her hus-band died, and since then with the aid of a 14-year-old boy she has cultivated 320 acres of land, and this year raised over 5,000 bushels of wheat besides corn, oats thoroughly. Another method is to dis-solve one pound of sulphate of copper in a bucket of hot water, and add enough cold

> In buying a veil never make the mistake of getting too little. New York milliners say that this is the prevailing sin of their patrons. The temptation to save a "quarter," and buy a veil a little too short is almost overpowering among women. If the saleswoman recommends a yard of veiling a woman will look at it critically and finally decide that she needs only three-quar-ters of a yard. The result is a ruined veil —one that can never be made to look nice. For a small hat a yard of veiling is needed; for a large one a yard and a half should be purchased. This leaves plenty for the drawing up at the back. If the veil is to be very long the front is first gathered by those who want a full hang. In gathered veils nearly a quarter of a yard should be added to the length. The ends of a veil can always be trimmed with lace and made to serve as an ornament upon the back of the hat.

Very large combs are used and these are of great assistance in holding the veil in place as well as in keeping on the hat.

Materials for bridal toilets, bridesmaids' gowns and wedding reception costumes were never before so rich and varied as they are to-day. Ivory satin duchesse is still the favorite material for bridal gowns, though a rich, heavy, white gros grain silk such as our grandmothers took their marriage vows in, is bidding for favor. White satin is exceedingly unbecoming to a plain woman and not at all suited to a very young bride unless draped with lace, chif-fon or tulle. Gros de Londres is an old weave returned under a new name and is being utilized to some extent, and so are heavy corded silks in rep and bayadere effect.

Bridesmaids' dresses change so constantly in fashion that it can not be said that any one style is the thing. Usually bridesmaids' gowns depend upon the individual taste of the bride, who decides this question. Just now it is the proper thing to have the bridesmaids dressed in pairs, each couple being in a different color. Gros grain silk, which is softer and wears better than taffeta, has to a large extent superseded this material, and of course the delicate shades are the ones usually selected. At noon and afternoon weddings, the attendants do not wear decollete gowns, though they not infrequently appear in transpar-ent yoke and sleeves. Big picture hats or poke bonnets covered with feathers or short 43-26-13t veils of tulle or lace are worn as a headdress.
