FARM NOTES.

MAKING HENS LAY. Experiments have been made to prevent hens from laying in the fall and winter so as to have them lay through the spring in order to provide eggs for hatching. One of the experiment stations also demonstrated that by judicious feeding it was possible to make hens lay or prevent them from so doing. No egg foods, condition powders, or drugs were used—the regulating of the food serving to control the production of eggs. It is a simple matter, all that is required being to feed the hens intended for laying on lean meat, removing all the fat giving the meat in the morning and a mess of oats or wheat at night. To prevent hens from laying, feed them all the corn they will eat. If not confined, and they have free range, give only one meal per day, at night, of meat, using an ounce for each hen. In winter give two ounces of meat per hen and then a quart of corn and wheat, mixed, to 15 fowis, anowing in this case the woman who had said hold the morning when the meat is fed. The but pleasant words, who by a bright story had prevented the discussion of a petty had prevented the discussion of a petty wheat, mixed, to 15 fowls, allowing no meals to allow the hens to become hungry. They will then work and scratch, which will be very beneficial. A little ground bone should be scattered over the yard for the hens to pick up, or a mess of cut bone may be given three times a week. A gill its best sense a woman of tact. of millet seed, scattered, usually induces fowls to scratch. By observing care in using proper foods, hens can be made to lay at all seasons of the year.

One rule which should be rightly observed is never to use a bird for breeding purposes that has at any period of its life been sick or which has shown evidence of all women in all conditions of life. not being perfect in every respect. As the summers passes and the fall comes there will be a large number of young birds from a bright spot in the day and her goodby a which to select, and as the work of selection is done frequently with more regard to beauty of plumage than to the hardiness and future usefulness of the birds, the result is manifested the next season. The foundation of the flock must be secured. The first essentials are health and vigor, mitted to the young it is a saving of time, money, and labor to use only birds that will produce vigorous offspring. That dread disease of poultry (roup) which deagency of the egg, but from each parent is inherited a liability or susceptibility to the ease out by allowing no sick birds on the will be but a few years, by careful selection, when a flock can be so bred as to have immunity from disease.

Farmers are not always busy in the winter season. In fact, fruit growers and gardeners lose a large portion of the year because they cannot find opportunity to apply their labor. A large flock of hens will of the man's glove, but the most stylish then pay, as the labor (which is the most important item of expense) really costs of the masculine article and are nothing if the work is done by the grower. If the flock pays only for the labor it will be a gain or saving, as time wasted is equivalent in loss to its value in dollars there is an extra length below the button, and to cover the wrist there is an extra length below the button, and to cover the wrist there is an extra length below the button, and to cover the wrist there is an extra length below the button, and to cover the wrist there is an extra length below the button, and to cover the wrist there is an extra length below the button, and to cover the wrist there is an extra length below the button, and to cover the wrist there is an extra length below the button, and to cover the wrist there is an extra length below the button, and to cover the wrist there is an extra length below the button, and to cover the wrist there is an extra length below the button, and to cover the wrist there is an extra length below the button, and to cover the wrist there is an extra length below the button, and to cover the wrist there is an extra length below the button, and to cover the wrist there is an extra length below the button, and the button there is an extra length below the button, and the button there is an extra length below the button. and cents. Now that there are are hundreds of chicks past the critical stage of existence it will be an advantage to sell the males and keep the pullets. True, it finer material and better finish than the may entail work and care, but it is the la-bor that is sold in everything that goes from the farm to market. Provide work naturally, they cost much more, but they for the winter by keeping poultry, even if are worth the money. the fowls must be sold in spring to get them out of the way when work in the garden is pressing, as the same land that is used for growing crops in spring and sum-houses should be movable. When the house is to be cleaned take the movable articles outside, dip a soft sponge in kerosene squeeze out the surplus fluid, and lightly sponge every portion of the roosts and boxes, applying a lighted match to them. Fire will quickly run over the articles and can then be quickly extinguised without injury. Every louse will be destroyed. By having all accessories movable the white washing or swabbing of the walls can be more easily done, and before the roosts and nests are placed in position they should again be lightly sponged as a preventive. This method requires but little time and the work will be well paid for in the invested. the increased number of eggs.-P. H. Jacobs in American Gardening.

—By proper management quite a number of different trees and shrubs may be multiplied by cuttings. One of the easiest to increase in this way—as is well known —is the willow. The grape also is largely grown from cuttings, as are most of the roses. Some of the latter, however, are refractory, not yielding readily to this method, and some of the grapes—the Delaware just in front of the right shoulder, again on for instance—require special care in order the lower seam of the collar. A round, to success. But most of the grapes and most of the roses, with the currants, goose-berries, quinces, mulberries and a number old-fashioned breastpin will find it just of other trees and shrubs, grow from cuttings with only ordinary care.

Cuttings usually do best when made of wood of the past season's growth, though quince cuttings of two years' growth will do quite as well. The length wave of using it too often. It is very apt to take from her the smart appearance so do quite as well. The length may be from eight to ten or twelve inches, and the lower cut should be half an inch or less below the lowest bud, and there should be eight to ten or twelve inches, and the lower cut should be half an inch or less below the lowest bud, and there should be at least two buds in the length—better three or more, as most of the root-forming. three or more, as most of the root-forming material is immediately around the buds.

The tie the better. Any time after the middle of October the leaves may be stripped off and the wood cut into proper lengths; then buried in a dry place in the garden until spring. A mound of earth should be raised above, for double purpose of throwing off the water, and protecting from frost so the callusing process may go on all through winter.

-It is the duty of every landowner to keep the public roads along his farm free from noxious weeds, particularly thistles, dock, velvet leaf, cockleburs and the like. In good material. Of course, if you are sick some states neglect in this respect is punishably by a fine. It is to the interest of the farmer to keep the roads clean, for the choice of the long graceful, sweeping manadjoining land is always seeded from a foul tle that is at least nine-eights if the other road. By cutting off the weeds just below is three-quarters. FOR AND ABOUT WOMEN.

Mrs. Morrie L. Abbott, of West Branch, Mich., bears the distinction of being the only woman in the world as far as known, who has ever been elected to the office of State's attorney of a county.

Being bright and comely in appearance, with a fresh, clear-cut face and strong voice, she became the pet of the electors, and at every meeting where she appeared she had immense crowds.

Attorney General Fred A. Maynard refused before election to give any opinion as to her eligibility for the office, but now says that she cannot take her place unless the Supreme Court says so.

The difference between the smart capes we are to wear this winter and those we have worn before is this-the new capes all finish at the bottom in a fitted flounce; their corners are rounded, and they are shorter in front than in the back.

She had been talking pleasantly to two or three women. She had made her goodbys all cheerful and bright, and after she had disappeared, one woman turned to another and said in a tone that was scoffing: scandal, was a woman who was as bravehearted as any that ever lived, and who bore, not only her own, but the burdens of a good many other people, yet she saw no reason why she should inflict her troubles on her friends, or why she should not be in

Linen collars now rarely appear, and then are worn merely to furnish a stiff foundation, around which a ribbon is wound twice and tied in a four-in-hand in front.

Ribbon four-in-hands display so many novelties and are so smart in appearance that the girl who knows may easily be forgiven for wearing them. For instance, a most charming one has two broad ends brought down flat to form a rest to the belt. This in itself might not be so unique were it not for the way in which the ribbons are fastened together. Eyelets are made on the two center edges, one ribbon fitting over the other and held in place by gold studs.

Here is a simple neck trimming, and suggests a way to use up odds and ends of ribbons: Take a piece of rather heavy ribbon about three inches wide, and five-eighths of a yard in length. Pin one end, pleated together, to the lower edge of the collar, fancy pin should be used for this purpose,

The modiste who designed the threequarter coat must, I think, have had a special grudge against some particular woman to whom she intended to sell it, for there isn't one woman that I have yet seen thus arrayed who looked well in it. Controlling the Indian

The Way to Keep the Red Man In Bounds Is to Deal Fairly With Him. proper way to keep the Indians peaceable is to right their wrongs. Do not send soldiers after the Indians, but after the Indian agents, whiskey dealers., deputy marshals and timber thieves. These Indians have rights, and they know their rights. They can tell you every treaty that has been signed with their nation since 1783, and they can tell you just how and by whom each treaty has been broken. Chief Flatmouth, in a council talk, said: "Your white men have shed blood of our young men along the shores of this lake for years, and yet never have they been prosecuted. The prairie Sioux have shed our blood, and they have not been prosecuted. We rise for the first time to defend our rights and you send soldiers to kill us, and we will be prosecuted. Your young men are the cause of this trouble, and our young men will end it."

It is unlawful to sell liquor on an Indian reservation, yet an officer of the steamer Flora, which plies between Walker and points on the lake in the reservation, sells all sorts of drinks, having a cupboard in the cabin. He served beer and whiskey to all on board, including Commissioner Jones and two Indian agents. The commissioner does not and did not drink, but he saw this illegal traffic carried on and said nothing. The Indian agents took their drinks and laughingly showed me the beer bottles labeled "ginger ale." There were several Indians on the boat. They saw the men who were there to set laws and exact right from them transgress the most rigid of all Indian reservation laws, and it is no wonder that the Indians think there is one law for white men and nother for them. What is needed in Northern Minnesota is not an armed force of soldiers, but a man of force and power to investigate Indian timber thieves, whiskey dealers and United States marshals and deputy marshals. Above all, what is needed is to turn the Indians over to the charge of the army and the war department, by which they are understood.—Leslie's Weekly

RELIEF SOON CAME. - "My stomach was out of order. I was dizzy and suffered with catarrh in my head. I procured a supply of Hood's Sarsaparilla and began taking it, and in a short time my stomach was better. I began to have an appetite. The catarrh was relieved and the dizziness left me." E. M. GRAVES, Tioga, Pa.
Hood's Pills are the only pills to take Hood's Sarsaparilla. Easy, yet efficient.

-A widower, says the Chicago News, who had a five-year-old son, married the second time, and his choice was a rather plain woman of about fifty. After the wedding they came home, and the father introduced her to the little fellow, saying: "Charlie, this is the new mamma I promised to bring After taking a long and steady look at her Charlie went over to his papa and exclaimed in an audible whisper: 'Papa, you've been swindled.
