-At the closing session of the thirtysecond annual meeting of the National grange, at Concord, N. It was carried.

A GIANT TOMATO STALK .- The Philipsburg Ledger comes to the front with a story of a giant tomato stalk that was grown by a gardener in that place last summer. In- join Rev. Illingworth, who has accepted a asmuch as it must either have been a whopper or the editress of the Ledger has learned | will go to housekeeping. The parishioners of to tell whoppers we republish her account that charge have made no mistake in callof it.

We had the pleasure, recently, to see a photograph of Mr. John Gill Sr., taken in his garden during the late summer, in the shadow of a tomato vine, over 13 feet in height. This tomato is a notable curiosity in the vegetable line. Two years ago Mr. Gill purchased red tomato seed, which came up in due season, thrived under the careful attention of Mr. Gill who is a skillful garden.

She had been ill with heart trouble and dropsy for the last year and a half. tention of Mr. Gill, who is a skillful gardener, and with the exception of one plant, bore fruit to name, like the handsome picture on the seed paper. This exception produced white tomatoes of the same size and shape of its red fellows—was an albino in fact. This was recognized as a freak in the vegetable world and Mr. Gill carefully saved its seed world and Mr. Gill carefully saved its seed and planted it last spring, and it is from this seed the plant we have mentioned grew. Prepared for something out of the ordinary, a tall trellis was built and the plant trained to it. But it grew like the fabled beanstalk until a height of over 13 feet was attained, and its many branches measured 1060 feet in length. This gigantic specimen was as pro-life in fruit as in vine, and bore over 1100 ripe tomatoes of a bright yellow color and about as large as a medium sized plum. When Jack Frost nipped the vine it was covered with over a thousand green tomatoes, that only wanted a little more warm weather to bring them to perfection. We don't believe this record can be beaten by any of our readers, but if there is its like in this country, we should be pleased to hear
